It is reported that the Public Service Corporation which has acquired control of the old Camden and Trenton Street Railway Company, known under reorganization as the Riverside Traction Company, will have a central heat and power plant constructed at Burlington. The lease under which the Public Service Corporation took control of the Riverside Traction Company is for a period of nine hundred and ninety-nine years. The corporation is reported to have guaranteed the $800,000 worth of five percent securities in connection with the reorganization of the road, and made from this guarantee is understood to have agreed to the payment of five percent, on the preferred stock, and also dividends on a sliding scale, on some of the common stock.

Suit was instituted in Camden last week by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to recover $100 damages from Francis McAdams, of Camden, for an alleged violation of the law in connection with a stop-over privilege. It is contended that while on his way from New York to Philadelphia, McAdams left the train at Burlington and when he boarded a train later for Camden, he was told by the conductor that the ticket which he presented had no stop-over privilege. McAdams, however, remained on the train until he reached his destination and refused to pay additional fare. The conductor reported the matter to the company. Recently in a similar case tried in which the company won out.

TAME GULLS OF SHETLAND

Each Family in Lerwick Has Its Own Flock Which the Children Feed.

There are many small villages in the world that have only one street; but Lerwick, in Shetland, besides having only a single street possesses only one tree, and it is not a very tall one either. There are no land birds there, not even a sparrow; but the sea gulls are plentiful.

The inhabitants of Shetland are very fond of their tree and very kind to the gulls, of whom the children make pets. Children who are brought for the first time to see the wonders of one-streeted Lerwick are always shown, as a great curiosity, "the only tree in Shetland."

The sea gulls are the sparrows of Lerwick; and as such they have a greater share in the town's life than the sparrows of London.

Every morning you will note that a sea gull sits on every chimney pot. Sea gulls swoop and hover over every roof in town. The air is full of their strange, high, plaintive, haunting cries.

Every house has its own familiar sea gull, and every street its own band of them. But according to the Fruit Magazine, they never mix. The children in each house have a pet gull, and their own particular sea gulls; and, having called them by those names, they feed them every day.

Each sea gull knows what is meant for him, and he is attached to one house over which he eats the food scattered from the house next door. He does not dare to do so. So all day long the sea gulls hover and call over the roofs of Lerwick.

The people of the town if they come across a little pile of rice laid upon the roadway step over it with care. They know that it has been placed there for some sea gull. And at night the sea gulls leave their appointed chimney pots and fly gracefully away to their resting places on the rocks of the Isle of Noos.

OLD FASHIONED FAMILY PEW

In That Rested the Strength of the Church, and It Should Be Restored.

One sometimes hears a deal of nonsense about the danger of creating a prejudice against religion in the mind of a child by making him attend church once a week. The danger would seem to be about one-tenth as great as that of arousing a prejudice against education by sending him to school twice a day. In both cases the remedy lies in the good sense of the parents and their estimate of the value of religion and education carefully instilled into the child's mind.

The strength of the church has been in the old-fashioned pew, with father at one end and mother at the other, and a stairway of more or less restless children. From that pew have gone out the upright, devout, consecrated men and women who have loved the church and maintained her worship and done her work in their several generations. For the sake of the church, and especially for the sake of the children, let it be restored.

If it is impossible for the children to attend both Sunday school and church service, this writer would by all means teach them the catechism at home and bring them to church that they may learn to worship God in the congregation of his people.—Southern Churchman.

Telegram That Saved India.

In connection with the Durbar, a museum of Mogul relics has been arranged, which contains, among other objects, the telegram which illustrates Montgomery's great saying, "The electric telegraph saved India."

This is the famous telegram dispatched by Lord Dufferin on May 11th, 1857, which gave the news of the rebellion to the north of India, and enabled Lawrence and Edwards and Nicholson to take steps for the disarmament of regiments on the verge of revolt, and to make those brilliant arrangements for the relief of Delhi by which the city was saved.

The mutiny was crushed out, and Delhi once more returned to her British allegiance.

FITZHERBERT TO TRIAL IN SENATE

Acetylene Gas Bills May Cause Big Scandal.

RIDNER IS ALSO IMPLICATED.

Governor Wilson Sends Message to Senate Advocating Adoption of Income Tax Amendment to Federal Constitution—Reapportionment Bill This Week.

[Special Correspondence.]

Trenton, Feb. 28.—For the first time in several years a member of the New Jersey legislature is to be tried for "such an offense as inconsistent with the trust and duty of a member of this senate." The offending member is Senator Richard Fitzherbert of Morris county, and the offense of which he is accused, stripped of its legal verbiage and reduced to its lowest possible terms, is that he entered into negotiations with parties interested to withdraw from a consideration two bills which he introduced in the senate.

The bills in question, should they become law, would, it is claimed, drive acetylene gas out of this state, and for this reason the Commercial Acetylene Gas company of New York, which has a factory at Harrison, Hudson county, has been particularly anxious to have the bills killed. The amount mentioned ranged from $500 to $5,000.

The trial of the senator was provided for in a resolution which was offered in the senate Monday night by Chairman Edge of the judiciary committee, to which the charges were referred when they were first brought forward last week.

After authorizing the senate to proceed with the trial the resolutions of the next Tuesday morning, March 5, at 10 a. m. date and directs the sergeant at arms of the senate to serve the necessary subpoenas and request the attorney general to be present to represent the committee.

Ridner the Go-between?

Accumulating the resolutions which were adopted was a report from the committee which told of the investigation which it had conducted that afternoon and set forth the nature of the charges. Briefly these are that the representatives of the gas company agreed that one Dr. George S. Ridner made advances to them by which he undertook to procure either the withdrawal of the bills or the passage of the bills upon payment to him of a certain sum of money and that the senator from Morris county, either at the inception of these negotiations or at any rate before their conclusion, became cognizant thereof, took part in the negotiations between the said Ridner and the Commercial Acetylene Gas company and that whether the said senator was in fact to receive a portion of this money so to be paid or not, at any rate acquiesced in this method of the disposal of this proposed legislation with full knowledge of the transaction.

The probe into the scandal began Monday morning, when the senate judiciary committee, consisting of Senators Edge of Atlantic and Reed of Camden, Republicans, and Senator Fitch of Hudson, Democrat, held a preliminary investigation. Senator Fitzherbert, with former Senator William D. Edwards, his counsel, was one of the first arrivals. Assistant Attorney General Gaskill appeared for the committee.

Mr. Edwards asked the committee what the procedure was to be, and Chairman Edge replied that the committee would meet that night and then the senate as a whole would determine what should be done. Senator Edwards announced that Senator Fitzherbert would not offer any defense until form day, but he had preferred against him by the senate. Affidavits by Edward L. Katzenbach, Oscar F. Ostby, the general manager of the Commercial Acetylene company, and M. E. Weisbach of the New York Evening Sun reporter, containing about the same testimony as they had given before, were submitted, and W. M. Stallman, aware that Dr. Ridner had requested that he (Ridner) be allowed to represent the company at Trenton. Dr. Ridner said that he was of some consequence at Trenton and spoke particularly about his influence with the senator from Morris. He did not, however, mention money.

Ostby a Poor Witness.

When Mr. Ostby was called as a witness he insisted upon giving no farther evidence than was contained in his affidavit. In this he told of going to the Trenton House with Weisbach to meet Senator Fitzherbert and of the conversation he had there with the Morris senator.

Jacob L. Newman, a Newark lawyer, then read a statement in behalf of Ridner, in which he claimed that the doctor was innocent of all wrongdoing in the matter and if the investigation was not conducted so that the character and reputation of the doctor was safeguarded he would seek such redress as would be open to him through other tribunals.

The governor sent to the senate a message advocating the adoption of the income tax amendment to the federal constitution, in which he said: "It seems to me of the utmost importance that this power should be preserved in unmistakable terms upon the congress of the United States. The jurists who first interpreted the constitution of the United States believed that this power might legally be exercised by the congress of the United States under the terms of the constitution as it stands, but later decisions have embarrassed the exercise of this power by restrictions as to render it practically nugatory."

"The limitations under which these decisions are imposed upon the taxing power of the federal government prevent the congress of the United States of a free choice of the sources from which the income necessary to support the government is to be derived. They put the taxing power in a straitjacket. Lawrence and Edwards and Nicholson to take steps for the disarmament of regiments on the verge of revolt, and to make those brilliant arrangements for the relief of Delhi by which the city was saved."

The mutiny was crushed out, and Delhi once more returned to her British allegiance.

Dead Slang.

Is there anything so dead as dead slang? I must be quite fresh. It offends the nostril. And no one should talk slang without the assurance that it is both infantile and immortal. John Galsworthy is modern. And in "The Man of Property" he produces the slang expression of the eighties. "A daverdy woman." It is a term of contempt for a woman. But is there any one born in the eighties who could explain that slang term, or remember it? You must get your slang fresh—there is little of it that stands the tinned preservation.

conspicuous service to the country if New Jersey might add her vote to the number of states who no longer will thus generously and in ungrudging public spirit to complete the necessary powers of the general government in the field of taxation."

Reapportionment Bill Up Soon.

United States Senator Frank O. Briggs was in Trenton Monday night, and it was said that he had come up from Washington to attend a conference of the Republican leaders of the state on the bill for the reapportionment of the state into the new congressional districts which is expected to make its appearance in the legislature before the week is out.

Under the new reapportionment New Jersey will have twelve representatives in congress, and the leaders here had considerable difficulty in carving out the districts in a way to give the party the most advantage.

Although the districts were not finally settled upon, there was good authority for the statement that they will be like this:

There will be no change in the lines of the fifth district, Jersey City, Newark, Camden, Gloucester and Salem make the First; Cape May, Cumberland, Atlantic and Burlington compose the Second; Middlesex, Monmouth and Ocean the Third.

To the counties of Hunterdon, Somerset and Mercer, now comprising the fourth, is added a section of Warren containing about 15,000 population, to make the new Fourth district.

The Fifth will be made up of Union, Morris and a section of Warren of about 28,000 population.

The Sixth will be Passaic county, with the exception of the northern wards of Newark, Irvington, Warren, Essex, Essex, Sussex and Bergen and the municipality of North Bergen in Hudson county.

The Seventh will be made up of the northern slice of Passaic, Sussex and Bergen and the municipality of North Bergen in Hudson county.

Eighth District—Bloomfield, Nutley, Belleville, Elmhurst, Eleventh and Fifteenth wards of Newark, Kearny, Hudson, East Newark, the Seventh ward of Jersey City and the city of Bayonne, having a total population of 207,040.

Ninth District—Second, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth, Tenth, Twelfth and Sixteenth wards of Newark, Irvington, Warren, Orange, all the Caldwell, Montclair, Glen Ridge, Livingston, Verona, Cedar Grove, Essex Fells, Roseland, South Orange township, South Orange village, with a total population of 229,000.

Tenth District—Orange, East Orange, First, Third, Sixth, Seventh, Thirteenth and Fourteenth wards of Newark, with a population of 213,025.

The eleventh and twelfth will be cut out of the part of Hudson county that is left.

To Stop Marrying Justices.

A number of prominent clergymen and laymen of the Catholic church attended Monday afternoon a meeting of the church people of New York City, which seeks to prevent justices of the peace from performing marriages.

Alfred T. E. Sorrenson, a justice, having been elected to the New York City bar, the church people of New York City, where, it is said, he does a lucrative business in the marrying line, opposed the measure.

While the present law, he said, was not all that could be desired, justice of the peace doing wrong under it in marrying couples could be impeached.

John Bentley, a young attorney from Jersey City, created a storm when in opposition to the measure he declared that the old notion that marriages were made in heaven had long been exploded. Ministers in Jersey City, he said, had steered at the city hall to run round to be brides and grooms to the church people.

There was no need of throwing religion around the marriage ceremony, and to deprive justices of the peace of the right to marry couples would be placing a premium on immorality.

The church people present resented this, but they did not give overemphatic expression to their resentment. The facility with which people of this country could marry, Mr. Fox of the Trenton Times, was the cause of the many divorces, and divorce was undermining society. Several other clergymen spoke in a similar vein, and Peter Backes suggested that the bill be amended so as to require the posting of the marriage license several days before the ceremony.

A hearing was given on Senator Biller's bill which levies a tax of 15 cents a ton on fertilizers sold in this state, which is levied on the basis of Hamilton square. Lewis Ridgeway of Mullica hill and Dr. Jacob G. Lipman, director of the state experiment station at New Brunswick, advocated the passage of the bill.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

By VAUGHAN KESTER
ILLUSTRATIONS BY D. MELVILLE

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old, worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Blanton, and Bob Yancy, a former slave of the plantation. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy.

CHAPTER II.—Nathaniel Price buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Blanton from applying to the new owner, the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the boy.

CHAPTER III.—Trouble at Scratch Hill. Yancy's home, when Hannibal is kidnapped, is the scene of a business man's agent, Yancy, who is kidnapped by a stranger and rescued by a man named Carrington.

CHAPTER IV.—Yancy is served with a warrant for arrest. He is kidnapped by a man named Carrington, who is a friend of the Quintards, and is rescued by a man named Carrington.

CHAPTER V.—Betty Malroy, a friend of the Quintards, has an encounter with Carrington, who is a friend of the Quintards, and is rescued by a man named Carrington.

CHAPTER VI.—Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same train. Yancy and Hannibal disappear with Carrington on their train. Carrington is a friend of the Quintards.

CHAPTER VII.—Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Blanton. He is a friend of the Quintards, and is rescued by a man named Carrington.

CHAPTER VIII.—The judge recognizes the boy, the grandson of an old friend. Carrington is a friend of the Quintards, and is rescued by a man named Carrington.

CHAPTER IX.—Carrington family is kidnapped. Yancy is kidnapped by a man named Carrington, who is a friend of the Quintards.

CHAPTER X.—Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Carrington is a friend of the Quintards, and is rescued by a man named Carrington.

CHAPTER XI.—The judge's faith in the reasonableness of mankind having received a staggering blow, there began a somewhat futile existence for himself, for Solomon Malroy, and for the boy. They kept to little remote places, and usually it was the early hours of the morning, or the cool of late afternoons, when they took the road.

A certain hot afternoon brought them into the shadow of a street of a straggling village. Near the door of the principal building, a frame tavern, a man was seated, with his feet on the horse-rack. There was no other sign of human occupancy.

"How do you do, sir?" said the judge, halting before this solitary individual whom he conjectured to be the landlord. "What's the name of this bustling little town?"

"Are you the voice from the tomb?" queried the judge, in a tone of playful sarcasm.

Carrington, amused, sauntered toward him.

"That's one for you, Mr. Peggie!" he said.

"I am charmed to meet a gentleman whose spirit of appreciation shows his familiarity with a literary allusion," said the judge, bowing.

"We ain't go no way to look," said Peggie. "Just you keep on to Boggs' race-track, straight down the road, and you'll find that out—everybody's there to the horse-racing and shooting-match. I don't know no more about the horse-racing, but you'll be in time for the shooting. Why ain't you there, Mr. Carrington?"

"I'm going now, Mr. Peggie," answered Carrington, as he followed the judge, who, with Mahaffy and the boy, had moved off.

"Better stop at Boggs'!" Peggie called after them.

But the judge had already formed his decision. Horse-racing and shooting-matches were suggestive of that progressive spirit, the absence of which he had so much lamented at the late raising at Newville. Memphis was their objective point, but Boggs' became a side issue of importance. They had gained the edge of the village when Carrington overlooked them. He stepped to Hannibal's side.

"Here, let me carry that long rifle, son!" he said. Hannibal looked up into his face, and yielded the place without a word. Carrington balanced it on his big palm. "I reckon it can shoot—these old guns are hard to beat!" he observed.

"She's the closest shooting rifle I ever sighted," said Hannibal promptly.

Carrington laughed.

There was a rusty name-plate on the stock of the old sporting rifle; this caught Carrington's eye.

"What's the name here? Oh, Turberville."

The judge, a step or two in advance, wheeled in his tracks with a startling suddenness.

"What?" he faltered, and his face was ashen.

"Nothing. I was reading the name here; it is yours, sir, I suppose," said Carrington.

"No, sir—no; my name is Price—Stuom Price! Turberville—Turberville—" he muttered thickly, staring stupidly at Carrington.

"It's not a common name; you seem to have heard it before?" said the latter.

Ware gave him a glance of undisguised astonishment, while Norton regarded him with an expression of stunned and resolute gravity.

Betty looked at the judge rather inquiringly.

"I am glad he has found friends," she said slowly. She wanted to believe that Judge Stuom Price was some better fellow than he looked, which should have been easy, since it was incredible that he could have been worse.

"He has indeed found friends," said the judge with mellowunction, and swelling visibly.

Now Betty caught sight of Carrington and bowed. Occupied with Hannibal and the judge, she had been unaware of his presence. Carrington stepped forward.

"Have you met Mr. Norton, and my brother, Mr. Carrington?" she asked.

The two young men shook hands, and Ware improved the opportunity to inspect the newcomers. But as his glance wandered over him, it took in more than Carrington, for it included the fine figure and swarthy face of Captain Murrell, who, with his eyes fixed on Betty, was thrusting his eager way through the crowd.

Murrell had presented himself at Belle Plain the day before. For upward of a year, Ware had enjoyed great peace of mind as a result of his absence from west Tennessee, and when he thought of him at all he invariably put a period to his meditations with the thought that he would never see him again.

More than this, Betty had spoken of the captain in no uncertain tones. He was not to repeat that visit.

As Murrell approached, the color of his face changed. As for Hannibal, he had gone white to the lips, and his small hand clutched hers desperately.

Murrell, with all his hardihood, realized that a too great confidence had placed him in an awkward position, for Betty turned her back on him and began an animated conversation with Carrington and Charley Norton.

Hicks, the Belle Plain overseer, pushed his way to Murrell's side.

"Here, John Murrell, ain't you going to show us a trick or two?" he inquired.

Murrell turned quickly with a sense of relief.

"If you can spare me your rifle," he said, but his face wore a bleak look.

"Don't you think you've seen about enough of Boggs' race-track, a wide, level meadow. The judge paused irresolutely, and turned his bleared eyes toward the judge.

"Well stop here, Solomon," he said rather wearily, for the spirit of boast and jest was quite gone out of him. He glanced toward Carrington. "Are you a resident of these parts, sir?" he asked.

"I've been in Raleigh three days altogether," answered Carrington, and they continued on across the meadow in silence.

Here were men from the small clearings in homespun and butternut or fringed hunting-shirts, with their women folk trailing after them. Here, in lesser numbers, were the lords of the soil, the men who counted their acres by the thousand and their slaves by the score. There was no flutter of skirts among the moving groups, the nodding of gay parasols.

"How do you do, sir?" said the judge, halting before this solitary individual whom he conjectured to be the landlord. "What's the name of this bustling little town?"

"Are you the voice from the tomb?" queried the judge, in a tone of playful sarcasm.

Carrington, amused, sauntered toward him.

"That's one for you, Mr. Peggie!" he said.

"I am charmed to meet a gentleman whose spirit of appreciation shows his familiarity with a literary allusion," said the judge, bowing.

"We ain't go no way to look," said Peggie. "Just you keep on to Boggs' race-track, straight down the road, and you'll find that out—everybody's there to the horse-racing and shooting-match. I don't know no more about the horse-racing, but you'll be in time for the shooting. Why ain't you there, Mr. Carrington?"

"I'm going now, Mr. Peggie," answered Carrington, as he followed the judge, who, with Mahaffy and the boy, had moved off.

"Better stop at Boggs'!" Peggie called after them.

But the judge had already formed his decision. Horse-racing and shooting-matches were suggestive of that progressive spirit, the absence of which he had so much lamented at the late raising at Newville. Memphis was their objective point, but Boggs' became a side issue of importance. They had gained the edge of the village when Carrington overlooked them. He stepped to Hannibal's side.

"Here, let me carry that long rifle, son!" he said. Hannibal looked up into his face, and yielded the place without a word. Carrington balanced it on his big palm. "I reckon it can shoot—these old guns are hard to beat!" he observed.

"She's the closest shooting rifle I ever sighted," said Hannibal promptly.

Carrington laughed.

There was a rusty name-plate on the stock of the old sporting rifle; this caught Carrington's eye.

"What's the name here? Oh, Turberville."

The judge, a step or two in advance, wheeled in his tracks with a startling suddenness.

"What?" he faltered, and his face was ashen.

"Nothing. I was reading the name here; it is yours, sir, I suppose," said Carrington.

"No, sir—no; my name is Price—Stuom Price! Turberville—Turberville—" he muttered thickly, staring stupidly at Carrington.

"It's not a common name; you seem to have heard it before?" said the latter.

"Well, how about the girl, Tom?" asked Murrell at length. "Listen to me, Tom. I'll take her away, and I'll take her away, and I'll take her away," said Murrell.

Ware shifted and twisted in his seat.

"Do you want the land and the money?" I reckon you'll want them or not, for I'm going to have the girl."

CHAPTER XIII.

Bob Yancy Finds Himself.

Bob Yancy awoke from long dreamless sleep; heavy-lidded, his eyes all open. For a moment he struggled with the odds and ends of memory, then he recalled the fight at the tavern, the sudden murderous attack, the fierce blows Sloosan had dealt him, the knife thrust which had ended the struggle. Therefore, the bandages that now swathed his head and face, the throbbing pain, and that he should be up and doing—where was Hannibal?

Suddenly a shadow fell obliquely across the foot of his narrow bed, and he saw the long body of a man, who, with his head in the doorway, was looking in at him.

"How are you, stranger?" he demanded, in a soft drawl.

"Where am I?" The words were a whisper on Yancy's bearded lips.

"Well, sir, you are in the town of Raleigh, North Carolina. You just step here."

But Yancy had heard Cavendish speak, and the murmur of Yancy's voice in reply. Now he heard again the words of the man who had been his enemy.

"I am some better, ain't you, sir?" she cried, smiling down at him. "It's been right smart of a spell, too; yes, sir, you've laid like a log, but now you're a matter of hours better—just that."

"How long?"

"Well, high on to three weeks."

"They say Yancy's eyes widen with a look of dumb horror."

"And you don't know nothing about my nerry?—you ain't seen or heard of him, ma'am?" faltered Yancy.

Murrell turned quickly with a sense of relief.

"If you can spare me your rifle," he said, but his face wore a bleak look.

"Don't you think you've seen about enough of Boggs' race-track, a wide, level meadow. The judge paused irresolutely, and turned his bleared eyes toward the judge.

Proposal On a Fan

Lisette's grandfather was taking her back to Honolulu, where she had finished her course in a fashionable San Francisco boarding school. Lisette had been an apt pupil in conforming with American fashions. Her grandfather hoped devoutly the first time he saw her transformed little Honolulu lady that she had derived as much from the text-books as evidently she had imbibed from the style journals.

Jimnie smiled Lisette as soon as the steamer left port. Anxious to become acquainted with her, he followed the couple on deck.

We are especially fortunate," the old gentleman was saying. "Never have I been on a smoother sailing vessel. You wouldn't know we were moving. The waves aren't even nervous."

"Pardon me," broke in Jimmie. "We haven't started yet."

His inimitable smile made Lisette back at him with the most beautiful smile that commenced in her great eyes. From that minute Jimmie was her devoted admirer.

Everyone called the lad "Jimmie," old and young were soon under the fascination of the round, overgrown baby face.

"Jimmie shows that pretty little Honolulu girl all over the deck," said the captain's wife.

"Yes, the old grandfather shadows out both. Just as soon as he's comfortably seated in his steamer chair, engrossed in some novel, he spies his granddaughter with Jimmie, and he's off after him."

"Jimmie came from the same town as we do," continued the captain's wife, and through some influence secured the appointment of paymaster between Jimmie and Lisette. The old man was nearly frantic; he grew thin and were an habitual strained, worried look, afraid to leave them out of his sight for a moment, he could be seen hobbling up and down the deck all day long.

The time drew near when Lisette was to land. All smiles had left her face. Jimmie was to go on and to go on meant a separation for months.

"I thought I suited you all right," he replied.

"No, you seem to dislike all the things I find pleasure in. For instance, would you like to take a tramp through the woods?"

"Surely, let's start early in the morning," agreed James, glad for an opportunity to be alone with Gertrude.

After being abused for three hours because he insisted upon tramping his partner's ace, James retired, to be awakened at dawn by a gentle knock at his door.

"Hurry, I'm all ready," called Gertrude.

James jumped helters-skelter into his clothes and found Gertrude waiting for him, looking not quite as pretty as she had in the favorable daylight.

After walking a couple of miles James protested that he felt weary and hungry.

"There's an apple orchard about a half-mile from here. We'll get some apples," said Gertrude, for nothing could deter her from continuing her walk.

A very sober couple appeared on the porch a few hours later. After a hearty breakfast Gertrude begged James to go fishing. He had to row around the lake for the rest of the morning in the broiling sun and all they caught were two small perch.

"Some strenuous life," he commented as the boat neared the land, and he was becoming bored by Gertrude's incessant talking of topics which did not interest him.

"These stunts are an everyday occurrence. Wouldn't you like to live the simple life?" questioned Gertrude.

"Not to my taste."

"The boys expect you to play in their baseball game," Gertrude called after James as he left her.

The baseball game Gertrude appeared with her golf bag requesting James to play with her. They chased the ball around the links until it started to pour rain in torrents.

"Oh, we always play in the rain," answered Gertrude.

"What's the trouble with your face?" asked Gertrude.

"I don't know. It feels all face."

"It's swollen and has red patches all over it. Maybe its poison ivy. After consulting the village doctor, who informed him that he had most likely touched some ivy in the woods and had a bad case of poisoning, James returned home on the next train to remain in the house for a week suffering intensely.

When James read of Gertrude's engagement to Harold Linton, champion of the football players, he heaved a sigh of relief.

"Thanks to that poison ivy I escaped in time. If I was so tired out in a couple of days how could I have stood it for a life time?"

Petrified Forest Giants.

Three petrified redwood trees that have been pronounced the very largest in the world that have thus far been discovered have just been uncovered from the debris of the mountain slide, only a short distance from the famous Bohemian Club Grove in Sonoma county, California. This place is near the little town of Occident.

One of these prehistoric monsters, that make the pyramids of Egypt modern by comparison in their ages, measures 23 feet in diameter and is 350 feet in length. The two other petrified trees are 13 and 12 feet in diameter, respectively—Scientific American.

Getting the Value of Coal.

The scientific method of buying coal, not by weight, but by thermal value, is likely to be adopted by the St. Paul city government. The "B. T. U." system, it is called, the industrial standing for British thermal units. The school board estimates that it will save six per cent., or $2,600, on 9,000 tons, the year's consumption. Many railroads are buying their coal, not for what it weighs, but for what it can do—Springfield Republican.

The Little Circus Rider

By PEGGY POWERS

"The circus is in town," announced Slim.

"The last time I was at a circus," answered Meriven, "was when I was a little shaver with but a dime of my own. All morning I helped around the tent, fed the animals, brought pail after pail of water to the elephants, arranged the seats for the crowd and one hundred and one things in return for a bit of pasteboard which would admit one in the afternoon to the wonders of circudom."

"Do you still remember how wonderful and magnificent it all seemed?"

"Hardly," my labors tired me out so that with all the noise, the din, the shouting and the music of the band, I slept through the entire performance."

"Let's go to the show this evening," said Sydney. I was presented with two box seats for a new circus, and I was to be allowed to try to watch the three rings at one time.

"The girl on that white horse is a marvel. So graceful and supple; she rides as easily as if she was seated in a rocking chair. How modest she is; nothing 'circus' about her," said Meriven.

"She can't be more than sixteen," answered her friend.

"Outrageous for a girl no more than sixteen years of age to waste her youth and beauty in a traveling show. How in the world did she happen to join a circus? Sometimes whole families travel together, but there is no one else with the same name as the program."

"Look, that horse kicked 'Mademoiselle La Tour,' exclaimed Meriven, excitedly. "Is she hurt? No, though that horse kicked her, she has not tumbled; she's up again smiling and bowing to the crowd as if nothing had happened."

"She's a brave one," said Meriven, jolting the apples from her pocket.

The little circus rider was constantly in Meriven's thoughts, and the following evening found him again in the box. No only that night, but for four consecutive performances did he wait the entrance of the darling young equestrienne.

Finally his desire to know something of the girl drew him to the box where, where he inquired: "If it were possible to assist her in some manner that she could earn her living in a less perilous fashion or probably make it possible for her to continue her regular education."

"I am sure your intentions are most honorable, young man, but don't waste your sympathy on 'Mademoiselle La Tour,' who is the wife of the leading clown in the show. They both work double time to help my mother's way through college. Now if you would like to meet their daughter," continued the manager, "who is standing over there with her young baby in her arms talking to her husband, the trapeze artist, I'll be glad to introduce you."

"No, thank you," said Meriven, as he turned away from the box office. "How much wider I was as a little kid to sleep through the whole show than watching my play on some young man's mother and spending eight dollars for box seats to plan the future education of that baby's grandmother."

Hurried Eating.

One of the causes which leads to over-eating, especially among men and busy people generally, is the haste with which frequently attends their meals. There is no enemy of over-eating like deliberation. If any of you doubt this, just try it! Eat slowly, masticating your food carefully, and see if you don't enjoy your food when you eat it less than you do when you gulp down each hurried mouthful. But more time might be given to eating than is often granted it by busy persons. You can't enjoy your food when you eat it in a rush, and you spoil yourself for all future enjoyment by upsetting your digestive apparatus. When you eat slowly you accomplish two ends, for you eat less and have more pleasure in the process.

Justico.

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes,
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing of drums
Still south proceeds this motto
In letters of living light—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Though the heat of the strong oppression
May grind the weak in the dust,
And the voices of fame with one acclaim
May call him great and just,
Let those who applaud take warning,
And keep this motto in sight—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage;
Tho' the enemy seems to have won,
Tho' his ranks are strong if he is in the wrong
The battle is not yet done.

For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of the night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

A man bowed down with labor!
A woman, young, yet old!
O heart oppressed in the toiler's breast
And crushed by the power of gold!
Keep on with your weary battle Against triumph might.
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Interesting School Methods in St. Louis.

At the recent convention of the Department of Superintendents, National Education Association, held in St. Louis, there were present from the State of New Jersey, besides the State Commissioner of Education, twenty-eight city superintendents, two county superintendents, one College and one Normal School instructor. All but three or four of these men came from the northern part of this State.

A number of the assembled superintendents took the opportunity, during the first day's session, of paying a visit to the Shepard School, one of the best schools in St. Louis.

The rooms and halls of this school are literally covered with framed pictures, large and small, which have been presented to the school by the Patrons Society of St. Louis. This organization consists of men and women who are interested in educational work, and besides presenting pictures to the school, they offer silk banners to classes and medals to individual pupils for superiority in athletic and scholastic work.

Each class room in this building is supplied with an aquarium, also presented by the Patrons Society, so that the work of this organization is truly wonderful, as the same policy is followed with regard to all the public schools.

An interesting time was spent in the Primary Department where a great deal of practical work is combined with the theoretical. For example, in the third and fourth grades, the work in arithmetic is made interesting and instructive by the construction of small store-rooms, the pupils acting as buyer, cashier, and storekeeper.

Pean, beans, canned goods and artificial vegetables, scales, dry measures, etc., are used, the pupils making their purchases with artificial money. The grocer is compelled to weigh or measure all articles sold, and make out his check, which the buyer takes to the cashier, who receives all money and makes the necessary change. The buyer is then asked to explain the transaction in full. The pupils at the seats were also busy making the proper change.

This kind of work is carried out as far as possible in all classes, the result being that practically everyone is at work all of the time. This compels more thinking on the part of the pupils than is possible through purely theoretical teaching or book work.

The Domestic Science and Manual Training Departments give instruction to the grammar grades of six other neighboring schools, thus using the Shepard School as an educational center. Home study is discouraged in all grades below the seventh and instead a great deal of collateral reading is encouraged. These are but few of the facts observed at this school. More may be written at some future time on this subject.

WANTED—Compromiser man to take charge of Riverton Country Club Course. Permanent position to right man. Answer Box 53, Riverton.

Rev. C. L. Candee will make an address tonight at the annual meeting of the Golden Hour Circle, which will be held in the Presbyterian Chapel.

The will of Susan Brady, deceased, of Riverton, has been admitted to probate and letters testamentary granted to her nephew, Samuel S. Daniels. The estate is left to a number of nieces and nephews.

A basket of lima beans, shipped from C. T. Woolston's farm near Miami, Fla., sold in the Philadelphia market Monday morning for $7.00. They were the first in the market. Tomatoes sold at $3.00 a basket.

George A. McCoy, of Riverside, well known in Burlington county, who went to California for his health in the fall, died at Pasadena on Tuesday of this week. His body will be brought home for burial.

Mrs. William MacKinnon, formerly of Riverton, has returned to her home in Palmyra after being quarantined at her sister's house in Philadelphia for four weeks, where there were two cases of diphtheria.

The dancing class which was organized several months ago, and which has been holding its meetings in the school auditorium, is very successful, and will continue to give their dances every two weeks, the next one being on the 14th.

C. T. Woolston purchased the double house on Main street, belonging to the West estate, occupied by J. B. Watson and G. B. Claffin, at the Special Master's sale last week.

A letter was read from the clerk of the Cinnaminson township Board of Education in reply to the notification by the Riverton Board that the tuition fee for 1912-13 would be thirty dollars per pupil, stating that the Board could not pay this amount, and that it would be necessary to make other arrangements.

C. T. Woolston has a new 1912 Paige Detroit self-startering touring car on exhibition. Mr. Woolston has taken the agency for the Presto starter, and already has several orders to equip cars about here. This starter is one of the best, and can be attached to any make of car for $25.

The annual school meeting will be held on March 19, at which time will be submitted, among other things, the proposition to convert the large school building at Fourth and Howard streets into a recreation hall at a cost of about $1200. The terms of three members of the Board expire this year—Messrs. Moyer, Washington and Moore.

There will be an organ recital and sacred concert at the residence of Mr. George L. Ridley, Main and Fourth streets, on Monday evening, March 18, at eight o'clock, under the auspices of the Music Section of the Poreh Club. There will be a silver offering taken for the benefit of the fund for the purchase of a new piano.

Luther S. Davis and family, who have been at Fouke, Ark., for a year have returned to Jersey, and will engage in farming near Shiloh. They came from New Orleans by boat, arriving at Camden Monday afternoon, where they were met by a number of Riverton friends, who welcomed them back to God's own country and wished them success in their new venture.

Mrs. Mary A. Williams, of Chester, Pa., died suddenly on Wednesday of heart failure. Her body was brought to Riverton this afternoon and services will be held Saturday morning at eight o'clock at the home of her parents, and at the Sacred Heart Church at nine o'clock. Mrs. Williams was the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Kerrigan. Interment Catholic cemetery at Moorestown.

Friends of Joshua E. Borton, of Moorestown, tendered him a complimentary dinner on Saturday in honor of his return from a trip around the world. The affair was held at the Bourse and was a strictly non-political gathering. About forty of Mr. Borton's friends were gathered around the board and a very enjoyable time was had. The dinner was confined to Burlington counties, Congressman Gardner being the single exception.

A miniature federation will meet in the Poreh Club next Monday morning at 11 o'clock. The Poreh Club has invited the Clubs in this district, which comprises all South Jersey, and it is expected that many delegates will be present. Mrs. H. C. Warren, president of the State Federation will preside, and the work of the Federation will be discussed at a Round Table. The subjects will be: 1. "What Our Club is Doing"; 2. "What Our Club Would Like to Do"; Miss Helen Lippincott, who is district vice-president, has arranged for this meeting and made the preparations.

A Plea for Women on School Boards.

The New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs is strongly, in sympathy with every effort on the part of our legislators to bring about a closer and more helpful relation between the women of our State and our public schools.

They believe that just as the business man accepts the absolute necessity of experience in the proper conduct of his business, of the need of employing men whose education, training, and occupation have especially fitted them for his particular line of work, so the same principle must be applied in the efficient conduct of our National, State, and City affairs. They believe that no more glaring example of the failure to apply this principle in civic affairs can be instanced than in the conduct of our New Jersey school system so far as its relation to the women of the State is concerned. Which of a child's parents it is, from the day the child comes into the world, is constantly busied with its care, moral, mental, and physical, throughout all the years preceding and during its school life. Yet men have so organized our system of public education that the women of our State, students and guardians of the children by nature and necessity, have, practically, no voice in the government of that institution, which, more than any other, except the home, permanently influences the life of these children—the public school.

Here and there, often after a bitter fight, a woman is elected to a school board, but the mothers of the school children are not allowed to vote for her. Here and there, under city government, a woman member is appointed, while the mayor is so inclined and not too much influenced by local politics. In consideration of the price women pay in bringing children into the world, and of the devotion of the best years of their life to their care and training, is it not a matter of fundamental justice that women should have representatives of their own sex on all our school boards to add to the councils of these boards the women's point of view?

The solution of this problem so far as elective boards is concerned is not yet before our Legislature, but a bill has just been presented which will, if passed, accomplish much in the case of appointive boards. This is Senate Bill 116, provides that, where boards are appointed, they shall be so constituted that at least one or more women shall, at all times, be a member or members thereof. Will not each voter of education write in the cause of education to our Senator and Assemblymen urging their support of this bill and so perform an act of simple justice for our women?

blurred against the low diamond-paned window over the corner window seat. Theropson Mrs. Bundy gave a cheap like a strangled cry and nearly went over backward in her rocker.

Holding the family revolver at arm's length and with her head turned the other way, Mrs. Bundy sat down again and they listened. There was nothing to be heard. They passed the rest of the night on guard.

Farther down the lake shore, on the rustic seat facing the moon, Laura Spilger and her young man and talking. Their absorption in each other was so great that they heard nothing until something strange was thrust over Laura's left shoulder. Young Burmaster made a wild bid to little grab at Laura as she leaped in the air.

Landing on the extreme edge of the alperly terrace, she tumbled down into the lapping waters with a gurgling splash.

Then as young Burmaster, too, sensed the presence of something weird and inexplicable he felt his scalp twitch in freezing horror, and leaped after Laura. Hand in hand they arose, dripping, and stood affrighted in the two feet of water at the shore's edge.

From the Spilger's cottage came questioning rumblings. Laura's father was demanding to know the reason for all the noise. Getting no answer, because the two in the lake were still paralyzed vocally, he came forth to investigate.

"What do you want?" he roared at something creeping by. "I'll teach you to play a mean game, you know that!" Presently there was the splash of the little Spilger boy's air-gun.

Nothing happened. The Spilgers should have met up very early in the morning, but the Spilgers were discussing the mystery. It was discouraging to the Spilgers to find that their peaceful summer home was getting just like every other place, and the Spilgers had to leave the house and take in the washing at night.

The Doggetts were roused from slumber by some one fumbling at the kitchen window. At the Plunketts' some one was trying to look at the chicken house. Mrs. Plunketts had heard footprints on the Plunketts' front porch that night and the Plunketts reported that their mignonette bed had been trampled.

At an impromptu mass meeting at the next morning the cottagers voted to spend $50 a month for a watchman. Then they took naps all the rest of the day to make up for their waktul night.

But early that same morning a weary and homesick cow had broken into a gallop as she spied the McLaues' barn and in two minutes more she was munching her feed and switching flies.

All Used the Inside.

The resolution of the New York board of health which will abolish all public places towels of the "common" kind—for the use of more than one person—recalled this story to a commercial traveler: "When I was on my first year ago for a new York notion house I had to visit a customer in a little New England town, many miles for the railroad, where there was one tavern. Over the wash basin, which stood on a table in the back of a roller towel, and a 'roller' towel, and it was that towel or none if you wanted to rid your hands of some real estate before taking a meal.

At my first experience I looked the thing over and then used the towel. The proprietor, seeing this, said: 'You New Yorkers ain't any smarter than other people—everybody wipes on the towel of a roller towel, and it makes 'em last longer.'

The Trouble.

"The pen," said the ready-made philosopher, "is mightier than the sword."

"So it is," replied the Chicago beef baron, "especially if you have reference to a cattle pen."

World's Smallest Armies.

If ever the dream of the disarmament of the world shall be realized there are several countries that would not have much to do in this line, as for instance, Monaco, whose army consists of 75 guards, 75 carabinieri and 20 firemen. The next smallest army is that of Luxembourg, with 135 gendarmes, 170 volunteers and 30 mail-clans. In the Republic of San Marino they can put in the field a total of nine companies of 950 men and 38 of floors, commanded by a marshal. The army on a peace footing consists of one company of 60 men. The most amusing of all the "armies," however, is that of Liberia. That country's fighting force is composed of 700 men and 800 officers; but the latter are evidently deemed very terrible by their own government, since the republic issues proclamations of neutrality when wars break out between any of the powers.

In Full Costume.

An artist was describing a revue that he had seen in Paris.

"It was a very delectable revue," said he. "In certain parts of it I was forcibly reminded of the story of the Parisian chorus girl. This girl had been put through her paces, and finally engaged. 'And now,' she said, 'about my costume. What costume shall I wear?'

"Let me see your tongue," said the manager. "Ah, it's coated. That will do."—Watch Dog.

The Test.

Billy—Huh! I bet you didn't have a good time on your birthday party yesterday.

Willie—I bet I did.

Billy—Then why ain't you sick to day?

Proverb Amplified.

"The pen," said the ready-made philosopher, "is mightier than the sword."

ODD WAYS OF THE COMMONS

Illustrated by the Imminent Peril of Mr. Pearce, Who Read Newspaper During Session.

A member of the British parliament remarks in London Opinion that the rule of the house of commons are not all that they seem to be. He proceeds to cite the case of Mr. Pearce, M. P., and the imminent danger in which he one day appeared to be. This was when the sergeant-at-arms, with his terrible sword in hand, rose from his chair and rushed with cyclonic speed in the direction of the mild, meek and altogether unconscious-offense member. It was quickly made clear what was the cause of this hasty saber charge by the sergeant. Mr. Pearce had actually been reading a newspaper, and there is no more heinous offense known to parliament. The members when in the chamber are not permitted to read newspapers for any purpose not immediately connected with the debate actually in progress, though one may succeed in doing it surreptitiously by folding the newspaper small and concealing it behind the order paper of the day, much like a boy may nibble at an apple in school, concealing the pippin behind his spelling book. Yet more gross breaches of parliamentary etiquette and decorum may be seen, members even wearing their hats when a fellow member is addressing the house, and even the dearest friends of an orator may go to sleep while he is delivering his choicest periods.

Japanese Fruit Trees.
Among the many ways of their own that the Japanese have for doing is their system of pruning and training fruit trees. The system is called "tana," and consists in training the branches overhead on trellis work made of bamboo or wire supported on wooden posts about five and a half feet high.

This offers advantages in gathering the fruit, and not only serves to protect the trees against wind and storms, but is said to increase production. Only very light pruning is done, and that usually in the winter-time. This system is generally adopted for pears and vines, less often for apples and plums.—Youth's Companion.

Metal Shingles.
A man in South Carolina has patented a single made of metal which resembles the wooden ones in size and shape. But the metal shingles interlock by means of a series of ribs and channels.

Rebellion

Billy sat on the extreme edge of the last stone forming the low wall bordering the grounds about his home. There was a lowering expression upon his face. Now and then he beat his heels viciously against the stones of the wall.

Around the corner swung Mr. Donnell. Billy and Mr. Donnell were chums, so she beamed and called "Hello!"

"Hello!" called Billy, looking up from under his frowning brows and made no answer.

"My goodness!" exclaimed Mr. Donnell, pausing in surprise. "What's the matter with you this morning? Where's your laugh? And your dimple?"

Billy growled something and shifted around. Then he spoke with a great effort. "They've got—"

He actually choked over the word. "They've got and got a—"

He jerked his head toward what had been home to him. The expression of his face signified his connection with the place was now completely severed.

"O—oh—I see," said Mrs. Donnell. She flicked the top of the wall with an absurd handkerchief and then sat down beside Billy. Her seriousness was very comical. "No wonder you are excited."

"I'm not excited," contradicted Billy, flatly. "I'm mad. I don't want it. What good is a baby? Nobody but me has shoes for me this morning!"

"Horrible!" sympathized Mrs. Donnell. She pulled one fat leg up on her lap and proceeded to remedy the defect in Billy's toilet. "Well, you see, the baby's new, and you must expect them to be dreadfully interested in it. People are that way. You've no idea how foolish they can be over a red, homely little new baby, Billy."

"There's awful red," Billy declared scornfully. "And it yells. That isn't the worst, though—it's a girl!"

He shot out the words in explosive contempt. "What good's a girl?"

"They certainly have piled it up on you, haven't they?" cried Mrs. Donnell. "Whatever are you going to do?"

"I'm thinking," announced Billy. "First I thought I'd run away. It ain't going to be any fun at home any more. All they do is look at the baby and talk silly over it. I can wait 'n' wait for somebody to pour the cream on my peaches, 'n' there's nobody to do it. Mother she stays right with that baby and father he stays with it, and Mary she just runs around from the kitchen to upstairs and back again and says 'The darlin'! Ain't it w-w-w-eet!'"

"Well, isn't it?" queried Mrs. Donnell in suspiciously shaky tones. Billy glared at her in reproach. "Sweet!" he almost yelled. "It's just ugly and red, and I hate it!"

"Billy!"

"I do!" repeated Billy. "It can't do a thing! It doesn't know anything! When father took me in to see it this morning I showed it my new knife and it wouldn't even look at it!"

Would it if it had been a boy? Boys have some sense! Father just laughed. And anyhow I didn't have any use for a baby."

"I know," said Mrs. Donnell. "I'll go and buy the baby and take it away and that will rid you of it."

Wild hope sprung into Billy's eyes. Then it died out. "You don't want it," he said, disgusted. "After you take a good look at it you wouldn't even let 'em give it to you!"

"Mercy!" said Mrs. Donnell. "Is it as bad as that? Well, I might let it anyway just to oblige an old friend like you. Here comes your father—I'll see about it now!"

"Good morning, Mr. Baxter! I was just talking business with your father. He says there is a superfluous baby up at the house that is in his way, and he'd like to dispose of it. If you'll sell it I'll take it off your hands. What price do you ask?"

"Um-m!" said Billy's father, frowning thoughtfully. "Now, that's kind of you. What shall we sell it for, Billy?"

"A quarter," Billy suggested tentatively.

"Oh, I think we ought to ask at least 30 cents," said his father. "But wouldn't your mother object to that? I think she'd feel sorry if we sold it."

"Would she?" asked Billy in surprise.

"Yes," said his father. "It's queer, but she's just the way. I don't know how to stand together and beat it. I don't want to hurt mother's feelings, do we?"

"No!" admitted Billy, irresolutely. "Have you seen what funny things it has?" They curl around one of your eyes, right?"

"Do they?" asked Billy, interestedly. "That's what they do," said his father. "Come with me and I'll show you. You can have lots of fun with it, Billy. Come on!"

"All right," said Billy, sliding down from the wall and joining his father. "I guess we won't sell it," he called back to Mrs. Donnell. "But thank you, just the same!"

REPEATS STORY AGAINST SENATOR

Osby Witness in Fitzherbert Inquiry in Legislature.

OFFERED TO KILL GAS BILLS.

His Price Was $5,000 For Both Measures, Said Witness—Gaunt Bill, Increasing Limit For Public Utility Franchises, Passed 15 to 4 in Senate.

(Special Correspondence.)
Trenton, N. J., March 7.—Not since the days of the state investigation of the Hudson county ballot box stuffers has there been a proceeding in the upper chamber of such general public interest as the trial of Senator Richard Fitzherbert of Morris county by the senate on charges growing out of his connection with the bills which seek to drive out of the state the manufacture and use of acetylene gas. Every available space in the lobbies and galleries was crowded with a throng of citizens, who took a deep interest in the proceedings.

The senate sat as a court. Attorney General Edmund Wilson and Assistant Attorney General Nelson B. Gaskill conducted the prosecution, while Edward L. Johnston, of the senate, acted as counsel for the defendant.

The charges against the senator, which claims to have been approached by Fitzherbert, and former Senator William D. Edwards defended the accused.

During the proceedings Senator Fitzherbert sat in his seat and maintained a calm demeanor while the most serious charges were being made against him. Senator Edwards created a sensation by attempting to drag into the proceedings a skeleton from the closet of Oscar F. Osby, the sales manager of the Commercial company, who brought the charges and who was the first witness called by the prosecution.

However, called him to order frequently and would not allow him to bring in anything not pertinent to the investigation.

Mr. Osby again told the story of his interview with Senator Fitzherbert and Dr. J. Spencer Ridner, who is mentioned with the Morris county senator in the case. He said that Ridner was "holding out for a price." Senator Edwards objected to the expression and President Prince overruled the objection. Senator Gebhardt said that in his opinion the testimony was not fair, and a long discussion ensued. At its conclusion Osby continued on Feb. 18 Ridner said that he could do the whole thing for $1,500—$500 for himself and $1,000 where it would have the desired effect.

In reply to the direct question of Mr. Gaskill, "What did the senator propose to do?" Mr. Osby replied, "He proposed to kill both bills for $5,000."

Telegrams Rained on Legislators.
Monday was more than usually a busy day owing to the number of telegrams which were given on various bills by committees of both houses. One of the most important of these was the hearing which the house committee on railroads and canals gave on Senator Fitzherbert's bill to abolish grade crossings.

During the evening over a thousand telegrams were received by members of the legislature claiming to have been sent by shippers and others having business with the railroads protesting against the passage of the bill on the ground that the cost of doing away with the crossings would ultimately fall upon the shippers in the way of increased freight charges. It was said that the telegrams were inspired by the railroads themselves.

At the afternoon hearing representatives of several of the smaller roads of the state testified that they would oppose the small roads by the measure would put their roads out of business, and former Senator Burton B. Hutchinson for the Pemberton and Hightstown road said that they would oppose the measure on the ground that it would put their roads out of business.

Senator 227, Mr. Leavitt—Authorizes cities to acquire lands whereon to erect public slaughter houses.

Senator 100, Mr. Read—Concerns licensing of cartmen, porters, hacks, etc.

House Bills Passed.
Among the other bills passed by the house are:

House 229, Mr. Ten Broeck—Extends time for the completion of the Piscataway water company's plant.

House 79, Mr. Front—Having been recalled from the governor and amended—Increases salary of the Newark license inspector.

House 344, Mr. Lowy—Permits wholesale liquor dealers to deliver their goods in any part of the state.

House 205, Mr. Beard—A fish and game bill.

House 395, Mr. Ten Broeck—Validates faculty appointments of deceased. Senate 189, Senator Leavitt—Authorizes statehouse commission to dispose of voting machines owned by the state.

Senate 79, Senator Johnson—The Bergen county small board of freeholders' bill.

HILL WANTED FAIR CHANCE
Wouldn't Race Train With Boat If Craft Was Going to Stick to River.

A delegation representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers opposed the measure on the ground that under it the roads would be obliged to spend so much money that they would have to close their doors. It was in the nature of the bill that it would throw engineers out of work.

Seaside Resorts Oppose Bill.
The bill was also opposed by residents of the seaside resorts in Cape May county, who said that it would deprive them of the business of the season.

There was also a hearing on the bill requiring the railroads to man their trains with larger crews, at which James H. Shannon said that railroad employees did not talk as they could like to because they were afraid that they would lose their jobs. Such a measure as the one under consideration was absolutely necessary, he declared, to compel the railroads to employ enough men on freight trains to run them safely.

There was something of a discussion in the senate over Senator Gaunt's bill, which increases the limit for which public utility franchises shall be granted in this state from twenty to fifty years. The bill finally passed by a vote of 15 to 4, and it was said it would remove all obstacles to the construction of a tunnel under the Delaware river between Philadelphia and Camden.

In advocating the passage of his measure, Senator Gaunt said that the farmers of the state wanted to develop their produce to market and to develop the suburban country by making it more accessible to business men of the cities. The Camden tunnel proposition, he declared, was involved in the proposition, for capital would not invest in such enterprises unless the present limit on franchises was increased. He wanted for South Jersey an equal opportunity for improvement which had been afforded North Jersey by the North river tunnels.

"Would Be Step Backward."
To destroy at this time the limiting of franchises, declared Senator Gebhardt, in opposing the measure, would be to take a step backward. He favored the present law and said that forty years was the life of any franchise.

That law, the Hunterdon senator said, was passed in the interests of the people, whereupon Senator Gaunt sprang to his feet and declared that the present limited franchise law was not passed in the interests of the people, but in the interest of trolley magnates, so that there could be no interference with their lines. Senator Gebhardt insisted that the corporations were behind the measure, but Senator Gaunt insisted that certain women of South Jersey asked the senate for that boon for commerce, for business and for residential purposes.

Other senators spoke on the bill, those from South Jersey advocating its passage, and it passed with only Senator Fielder, Gebhardt and Silzer voting against it.

The senate indulged in some further critical freewheeling on the senate bill which prohibits the employment of females for more than ten hours a day. Mr. Fielder sought to have the measure amended so that the days in mercantile establishments might be extended during the week before Christmas, and to allow women to work twelve hours for two days a week, with sixty hours as the maximum for the week.

Senator Edge, who introduced the bill, objected to any amendment. The lawmakers of New Jersey, he said, had been very volitional in the past to limit the working hours of men, but up to this time they had neglected the condition of the working women. At the present time there were employed in this state 75,000 women, and their physical and mental condition should be preserved because the men are to be the mothers of the coming citizens.

Workers' Bill Goes Over.
Mr. Fielder's first amendment was adopted, while the second was rejected, and at the request of Senator Nichols, who said he wanted to offer and amend, extending certain women employees who in certain seasons of the year worked for the canneries of the year, the bill was laid over.

The senate has passed these measures for water supply and of decided interest to government of cities.

House 23, Mr. Ten Broeck—Provides that president of common council shall act as mayor and defines scope of duties.

Senate 21, Mr. Lewis—Prohibits use of repeating rifles in gunning.

Senate 151, Mr. Silzer—Makes it a misdemeanor to steal ice from private ponds.

HILL WANTED FAIR CHANCE
Wouldn't Race Train With Boat If Craft Was Going to Stick to River.

A delegation representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers opposed the measure on the ground that under it the roads would be obliged to spend so much money that they would have to close their doors. It was in the nature of the bill that it would throw engineers out of work.

Seaside Resorts Oppose Bill.
The bill was also opposed by residents of the seaside resorts in Cape May county, who said that it would deprive them of the business of the season.

There was also a hearing on the bill requiring the railroads to man their trains with larger crews, at which James H. Shannon said that railroad employees did not talk as they could like to because they were afraid that they would lose their jobs. Such a measure as the one under consideration was absolutely necessary, he declared, to compel the railroads to employ enough men on freight trains to run them safely.

There was something of a discussion in the senate over Senator Gaunt's bill, which increases the limit for which public utility franchises shall be granted in this state from twenty to fifty years. The bill finally passed by a vote of 15 to 4, and it was said it would remove all obstacles to the construction of a tunnel under the Delaware river between Philadelphia and Camden.

In advocating the passage of his measure, Senator Gaunt said that the farmers

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old plantation, known as the "Belle Plaine," where the Judge, a man of great wealth and power, is seated in a high-backed chair, looking at a book. "Can't you be happy without me?"
"No."
"But you don't try to be?"
"No use in my making any such foolish effort, I'd be doomed to failure."
"Good-by, Charley—I really must go."
He looked up yearningly into her face, and yielding to a sudden impulse, she stooped and kissed him on the forehead, then she fled from the room.

CHAPTER XV.

At the Church Door.
Tom found Betty at supper.
"You were over to see Norton, weren't you, Bet? How did you find him?"
"The doctor says he will soon be about again."
"Betty, I wish you wouldn't go there again—that's a good girl!" he said tactfully, and as he conceived it, affectionately. Betty glanced up quickly.

"What he saw was a man verging on sixty, lean and dark, with thin, shaven cheeks of a bluish cast above the jaw, and a strongly aquiline profile. Long, black locks swept the collar of his coat, while his tall, spare figure was habited in sleek broadcloth and spotless linen. For a moment the judge seemed to struggle with doubt, then his face went white and the book slipped from his fingers to the window ledge.

The stranger, his business concluded, swung about on his heel and quitted the office. Mr. Saul, bending above his desk, was making an entry in the ledger, the judge shuffled to his side.

"Who was that man?" he asked thickly, resting a shaking hand on the clerk's arm.
"That—Oh, that was Colonel Fentress. I was just telling you about."

"Has he always lived here?"
"No; he came into the county about ten years ago, and bought a place called 'The Oaks.'"
"Has he a family?" The judge appeared to be having difficulty with his speech.

"Not that anybody knows of. Some say he's a widower, others again say he's an old bachelor; but he don't say nothing. The colonel got his friends, to be sure, but he don't mix much with the real reality. One of his particular intimates is a gentleman by the name of 'Murrell.'"
The judge nodded.

"I've met him," he said briefly. Acting on a sudden impulse, the judge muttered something about retreating later, and hastily quitted the office.

In the hall the judge's steps dragged, and his head was bowed. He was busy with his memories. Then suddenly he stopped, and he said to himself: "Damn him—my God! for ever damn him!" he cried under his breath, in a fierce whisper.

They finished supper, the dishes were cleared away, and the candles lighted, when the judge produced a mysterious leather-covered case. This he opened, and Mahaffy and Hannibal saw that it held a handsome pair of dancing slippers.

"What did you get 'em, Judge?" "Oh, ain't they beautiful?" cried Hannibal, circling about the table in his excitement.

"My dear old, they were purchased only a few hours ago," said the judge quietly, as he began to load them.

Norton had fiddled down to Belle Plaine ostensibly to view certain of those improvements that went so far toward embellishing Tom Ware's estate.

"Do you think Belle Plaine is ever going to look as it did, Charley?" as we remember it when we were children?" asked Betty.

"Why of course it is, dear, you are doing wonders!"
Ware stalked toward them. Having dined with Betty as recently as the day before, he contained himself with a nod in her direction. His greeting to Norton was a more ambitious undertaking.

"I understand you've a new overseer?"
"Then you understand wrong—Carrington's my guest," said Norton. "He's talking of putting in a crop for himself next season, so he's willing to let me make mine."

"Keep your wife, Tom, and within a week you will have forgotten all about Norton and your sister. I am going to give them something else to worry over."
Ware went from the cabin.
"Look here, how about the boy—are you ready for him if I can get my hands on him?"

CHAPTER XVI.
The Judge Offers a Reward.
The news of Charley Norton's murder spread quickly over the county. For two or three days bands of armed men scoured the woods and roads, and then this activity quite unproductive of any tangible results ceased, matters were allowed to rest with the constituted authorities, namely Mr. Betts, the sheriff, and his deputies.

No private citizen had shown greater zeal than Judge Slocum Price. One morning he found under his door a folded paper:

"You talk too much. Shut up, or you'll go where Norton went."
A few moments later he burst in on Mr. Saul.

"Glance at that, my friend!" he cried, as he tossed the paper on the clerk's desk. "What do you make of it, sir?"

"Well, I'd keep still!"
The judge laughed derisively as he bowed himself out.

He established himself in his office, and he was not long in coming to the conclusion that the letter was not a threat, but a challenge.

He looked over his shoulder at the door. The sheriff came direct from Mr. Saul and arrived out of breath, but the letter was not mentioned by the judge. He spoke of the county, of the rain, and the intricacies of county politics. The sheriff withdrew mystified, wondering why it was he had not felt at liberty to broach the subject, which was uppermost in his mind.

His place was taken by Mr. Peggie and on the heels of the tavern-keeper came Mr. Bowen. Judge Price received them with a cordiality that was not mentioned by the judge. He spoke of the county, of the rain, and the intricacies of county politics. The sheriff withdrew mystified, wondering why it was he had not felt at liberty to broach the subject, which was uppermost in his mind.

his spiritual tracks. "In a room about way, ma'am, we're bound to believe in the omnipotence of Providence—we must think it—though a body might be disposed to hold that way Tennessee had got out of the straits to direct him, but his striving had been in vain, for though the judge valued Mr. Mahaffy because of certain sterling qualities which he possessed to discern beneath the hard crust that made up the external man, he was not disposed to accept him as his mentor in nice matters of taste and gentlemanly feeling. He owed it to himself personally to tender his sympathy. Miss Malroy must have heard something of the honorable part he had played; surely she could not be in ignorance of the fact that the lawless element, dragging his further activities, had threatened him. She must know, too, about that reward of five thousand dollars. Certainly her grief could not blind her to the fact that he had met the attorney with a largeness of public spirit that was an impressive lesson to the entire community.

These were all points over which he felt that his friend, in seeking to keep him away from Belle Plaine, was standing squarely in his light. He really could not understand Solomon or the objects of his policy. He felt that Norton had probably left a will—no one knew yet—probably his estate would go to his intended wife—what more likely? He understood Norton, he knew his mind, and he knew that Norton had been a man of great wealth and power, and his wife was a woman of great beauty and grace.

"Since You Insist, Ma'am—My Best Regards."
"Did you walk out, Judge Price?" asked Betty kindly.

"Nothing more than a healthful exercise—but we will not detain you, ma'am; the pleasure of seeing you is something we had not reckoned on!" The judge's speech was thick and unctuous with good feeling. He wished that Mahaffy might have been there to note the reserve and dignity of his department.

"But you must let me order lunch for you," said Betty. At least this questionable old man was good to Hannibal.

"I couldn't think of it, ma'am—" "You'll have a glass of wine, then," urged Betty hospitably. For the moment she had lost sight of what was clearly the judge's besetting sin.

The judge paused abruptly. He endeavored a moment of agonizing irresolution.

"On the advice of my physician I dare not touch wine—good, ma'am, and liver—but this restriction does not apply to corn-blinks—in moderation, and as a tonic—rather than to meals, immediately after meals or at any time between meals—always keeping in mind the idea of its tonic properties. The judge seemed to mellow and ripen. This was a better than having the dogs licked on you! His manner toward Betty became almost fatherly. Poor young woman, so lonely and desolate in the midst of all the noise and bustle, he had been so long a while, and when Little Steve presented himself and was told to bring whisky, audibly smacked his lips—a whole lot better, said he.

"I am sorry you think you must hurry away, Judge Price," said Betty. She still retained the small brown hand Hannibal had thrust into hers.

"I give me credit for common sense in today, ma'am, and I have reason to think my share of it will be especially heavy, for it brings the bulk of my professional correspondence." In ten minutes the judge had received just the communication he wanted—a letter which had followed him through four states and seven counties. "I expect my secretary—" he said, fixing his eyes on the letter, already dipping into it; an excellent assistant, ma'am, but literary rather than legal.

Little Steve reappeared bearing a silver tray on which was a decanter and glass.

"Since you insist, ma'am," the judge poured himself a drink, "my best respects—" he bowed profoundly.

If you are quite willing, Judge, I think I will keep Hannibal. Miss Bowen, who has been here—since—her voice broke suddenly.

"I understand, ma'am," said the judge soothingly. He gave her a glance of great concern and turned to Hannibal. "Dear ind, you'll be very quiet and obedient, and do exactly as Miss Malroy says. When shall I come for him, ma'am?"

"I'll send him to you when he is ready to go home. I am thinking of visiting my friends in North Carolina, and I should like to have him spend as much time as possible with me before I start for the east."

It had occurred to Betty that she had done little or nothing for the child; probably this would be her last opportunity.

The state of the judge's feelings was such that with elaborate absence of mind he poured himself a second drink of whisky; and that there should be no doubt the act was one of inadvertence, said again, "My best respects, ma'am," and bowed as before. Putting down the glass, he backed toward the door.

"But why not do more than paralyze Solomon—that would be pleasant but especially profitable. The judge came back quickly to the vexed problem of his future. He desired to make some striking display of Miss Malroy's courtesy. He knew that his credit was experiencing the pangs of an early mortality; he was not averse, yet for some days he had been sensible of the fact that what he called the commercial class was viewing him with open derision; but he must have a display of his credit. They were entering Raleigh now, and he ordered the coachman to pull his horses down to a walk. He had decided to make use of the Belle Plaine facilities for the purpose. He was entering Raleigh now, and he ordered the coachman to pull his horses down to a walk. He had decided to make use of the Belle Plaine facilities for the purpose.

When he invaded virgin territory he believed in starting the largest possible number of accounts without delay. The advantages of this system, as he explained his workings to Mahaffy, was that it bred a noble spirit of emulation.

He let it be known in a general way that things were looking up with him; just in what quarter he did not specify, but there he was, seated in the Belle Plaine carriage, and the inference was unavoidable that Miss Malroy was to recognize his activities. In a substantial manner.

Mahaffy, looking away the afternoon in the county clerk's office, heard of the judge's return. He heard that Charley Norton had left a will; that Thicket Point went to Miss Malroy; that the Norton countess, the wife of the Tennessee were going to put up a fight; that Judge Price had been retained as counsel by Miss Malroy; that he was authorized to begin an independent search for the Cherokee's murderer, and was to spare no expense; that Judge Price was going to pay his debts. Mahaffy grinned at this and hurried home. He could believe that the last that was the crowning touch of unruliness.

The judge explained the situation. "I wouldn't withhold hope from any man, Solomon; it's the cheapest thing in the world to do, and the thing we are most miserably about extending to our fellows. These people all feel better—and what did it cost me?—just a little decent corn, idleness; just the knowledge of what the unavoidable associations of ideas in their minds would do for them."

What had seemed the corpse of credit breathed again, and the judge and Mahaffy immediately embarked upon a characteristic celebration. Early candle-light dinners, making a beginning; midnight suppers, and purple of dawn—and they were still at it, back of closed doors and shuttered windows.

CUTTING THROUGH CAPE COD
Canal That Will Save 120 Miles of Sailing May Be Completed Next Year.

So much attention has been given to the digging of the great ship canal for the isthmus of Panama, and locally, so much has been expended in the slow and tedious building of the large canal across New York state, that it has almost been lost of the Cape Cod canal, which has been in project since June, 1899.

This canal has been projected since 1820, for the Pilgrims saw the advantage of saving this 120 miles of sailing around Cape Cod, and the danger from the state that the seasons of the year are said to be very severe off the cape itself. In the last 60 years there have been 2,181 sailing vessels lost on these voyages, and more than 700 lives. It is said that more than 25,000,000 tons of freight are carried yearly past the mouths of the canal, and the saving in freightage alone will be considerable. It is a very short time. Insurance rates that will be saved in the construction of the short cut will be a very large figure, for the compass of the world that the fog and gales are very destructive and that losses demand high premiums upon all cargoes.

The canal will run from Barnstable bay on the outer side of Barnstable on the north side, and will lessen the difference in distance between New York and Boston by water about 120 miles. It will be large enough for the largest vessels afloat, and it is expected that it will be completed in 1912, though this statement is doubted by some, as trouble has been had with several contractors who have failed to complete their work.

EDITORIAL.

In the school report printed and circulated this week the Board of Education asks for $1,250 to change the old school into a recreation building. While this would be a very fine thing, we do not feel that the taxpayers are warranted in assuming this expense for something that is not an absolute necessity, considering the other demands that are being, and will be made on the public purse.

School Appropriation.

If you are a resident of Riverton, with an interest in its educational facilities, its tax rate and the general welfare of the town, particularly as it relates to the children, you can have no more important engagement for next Tuesday evening than the annual school meeting which will be held in the auditorium of the school building.

The amount asked for this year is $7,700, stated on the notice posted on the meeting, as current expenses, but in the report of the Board of Education printed and circulated, this amount is divided as follows:

Teachers.....	$ 6,000 00
Janitor.....	720 00
Changing old school to Recreation building.....	1,250 00
Books and supplies.....	500 00
Light and fuel.....	600 00
Public attending Palmyra High School.....	750 00
Medical Examiner.....	250 00
District clerk.....	175 00
Water rent.....	100 00
Printing.....	100 00
Treasurer.....	75 00
Interest on temporary loan.....	50 00
Incidentals.....	380 00

Supposed to receive from State.....$11,800 00

To be raised by district tax.....$ 7,700 00

In addition to this $7,700, there will be raised this year $1,000 for the retirement of a bond on the new school building, and $1,400 for interest, a total of $2,400, which, added to the $7,700 makes $10,100 the Board will need this year.

While $7,700 was asked for last year, the retirement of the bond and the interest brought the figure raised by taxation up to $10,204.

This matter of retiring a bond of $1,000 each year, and paying interest on the bonds was arranged for at the school meeting in 1910, and hence does not come up for appropriation each year.

It will be noted that one of the items above is $1,250 for changing old school to recreation building. It is a question for you to consider—whether or not it is advisable to do this at the present time.

The taxpayers are under pretty heavy expense as it is, for absolute necessities, and with the sewer disposal plant coming along in about a year, will have their burden still further materially increased.

Miniature Federation.

The Miniature Federation which was held in the Porch Club on Monday was largely attended by women from the first and second districts of the Federation of New Jersey. Miss Helen Lippincott, district vice-president, presided, and Mrs. H. C. Warren, president State Federation, was present.

The subjects of the day were "What Our Club Would Like to Do," were freely discussed and reports given from the various Clubs. Miss Amelia Coale, acting president in the absence of Mrs. Roberts who is in Bermuda, reported for the Porch Club that they were working along all the lines of Club work.

Wherever the Clubs of the Federation report it seems that the Porch Club stands at the head, for it is active in all its sections—Art, Mothers, Music, Social, Study, Suffrage, and Village Improvement. The Porch Club has recently purchased a new piano for the use of its members, but particularly for the Music Section.

Heavy Rains Damage Streets.

At the meeting of the borough council last night the highway committee reported that the heavy rain this week had caused considerable damage to the streets, which was being repaired as rapidly as possible.

The chairman further reported that many complaints had been received of ashes and other refuse being dumped on the streets. He was instructed to see that the ordinance prohibiting this was enforced.

The following bills were ordered paid: J. H. Rice, salary and expenses $51 73; Chas. F. Bopp, salary.....112 35; Riverton Fire Co., rent.....50 00; Empire State Surety Co.....20 00; Chas. G. Davis, recording.....13 80; Chas. E. L. P. and H. Co.....78 00; Public Service Gas Co.....177 12; Wm. Quigley, salary and feeding prisoners.....51 00; Walter Miller, salary and feeding prisoners.....51 75; Louis Corser.....37 74.

An ironing board took fire from an over-heated stove, in the laundry at the home of P. D. Reynolds on Lippincott avenue Tuesday morning. The fire company was summoned but Mrs. Reynolds and the maid had thrown the board outside before help could arrive.

Nothing else caught fire, although the wood-work was badly blistered from the heat.

Walter H. Lippincott has just finished planting oriental planes in front of his property on Park street. This now makes a continuous line of these trees from Thomas avenue to Lincoln avenue, with the exception of one property, which may be done later. Besides being very attractive the oriental plane is particularly suitable for shade tree planting owing to the fact that it is comparatively free from the ravages of scale and other injurious insect pests.

The Shade Tree Commission is again at work on the shade trees, trimming, pruning, and removing dead wood and unsightly limbs. Main street has been finished and Broad street nearly done. Howard street, Lippincott and Thomas avenues will follow and the work will be continued until all the shade trees on the streets of the borough have been put in good shape. The Commission is making preparations to combat the woolly maple scale, which appeared in great numbers on the trees last year. Early this year the trees will be sprayed with soot solutions calculated to greatly diminish the spread of this pest, and eventually wipe it out altogether.

Elia Pecker, a colored domestic employed at the home of Joseph Beck Tyler, was arrested on Tuesday charged with larceny. Mrs. Tyler went out for few minutes and on her return found the bureau drawers topsy-turvy and $45 gone. She at once notified Chief of Police Mattia who detailed Marshal Miller on the case. The accused girl did not bring to light the missing money, but did reveal the fact that she had appropriated some of Mrs. Tyler's clothing. She was given a hearing before Squire Coddington and kept in the lockup until Thursday morning, while efforts were made by her friends to secure bail. Failing to secure it she was committed to the county jail.

Harry Betz went to New York Wednesday on business.

Lloyd Major has resigned as clerk for Compton the Grocer.

Herbert Richman visited friends in Millville over Sunday.

Mrs. H. H. Shain entertained a number of friends Saturday.

James Bradley, of Wilmington, Del., was in Riverton Sunday.

Hastings Truett, of Atlantic City, visited his mother t. week.

Mrs. John M. Murphy spent Wednesday in Glassboro with relatives.

Mrs. Frank Troutman spent Sunday with her parents at Llanerch, Pa.

Mrs. John Maloney, of Tacony, has been visiting relatives in Riverton.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Jones and son visited her brother in Ambler, Pa., on Sunday.

A social meeting of The Field Club Auxiliary will be held in the Club rooms next Thursday evening.

Mrs. Ralph W. Gibbon, who was operated on last week at the Hahnemann hospital, is improving nicely.

Miss Mabel Soley has left the telephone exchange and Mrs. Clara Radcliffe has been employed to fill the vacancy.

Mrs. Schoenweis, of Philadelphia, has just returned from a trip to Bermuda, and was in Riverton on Monday visiting friends.

It is expected that President Taft will be the guest of the Republican Club of Trenton at their annual dinner which is held in April.

The heavy rains which did so much damage to some of the streets this week, left the section of Thomas avenue at the top of the hill, where it has been improved with stone, unharmed. It looks as though this form of construction would be durable, and the sooner the balance of Thomas avenue down to the railroad is treated in a like manner, the sooner needless expense for repairs will be at an end.

A Public Health Education Meeting under the auspices of the Child Hygiene Committee of the N. J. Jersey Congress of Mothers and the Visiting Nurse Society will be held at Centenary M. E. Church, Fifth and Cooper streets, Camden, Friday evening, March 22nd, at 8 o'clock. Dr. Alexander Murray, Jr., president New Jersey Society for the Prevention of the Social Diseases, will make an address on "The Need of Organized Effort to Further Moral Prophylaxis."

New Rector for Christ Church, Riverton.

At a special meeting of the vestry of Christ Church, Riverton, held on Friday, March 1, 1912, the Rev. John Rigg, B. D., rector of Immanuel Church, New Castle, Del., was unanimously elected rector.

Mr. Rigg has accepted the election and expects to enter on his duties May 1. The Rev. Mr. Rigg is a native of Jamaica, W. I., where he was born in 1869. He is a graduate of the Theological College of Jamaica and was ordained by the Archbishop of Jamaica, Dr. Nuttall, in 1892. After holding several important offices in Jamaica he came to the U. S. A. in 1907, and was at once elected rector of the venerable parish at New Castle, where he has done good work in strengthening the Church in that old town. He is a man of most pleasing personality, a strong Churchman, a good preacher and a man of high intellectual and spiritual attainments, and one that will prove a worthy successor to the former distinguished rector of Christ Church, Mr. Rigg is married and has six children, his wife being the daughter of a former Canon of the Cathedral in Jamaica.

Music Teaching as a Moral Force.

Music is generally recognized as a graceful accomplishment. Beyond this many people are awakening to the fact that it is closely related to health.

The best breathing, which goes with proper habits of singing, more correct vitalizes the blood and so helps to build up healthier organs in the body. Nor does the good influence stop here, for the musical tones invigorate the nervous system and strengthen the will power. This healthy development of the normal appetites prevents the craving for unhealthy stimulants and so protects from nervous and debilitating habits. But to produce its greatest effect the musical training should be begun in early childhood, before bad habits have been formed and while the child is most susceptible to the influence of rhythmic movement and pure tone. Fortunately, music can now be taught to children in a purely scientific way and with all the charm of play.

School Notes.

On Thursday, March 14, Miss Parker, the kindergarten teacher, visited the school at Thirteenth and Spring Garden streets, Philadelphia.

On March 7, Miss Helen Evald visited the Huey school, at Fifty-second and Pine streets, Philadelphia, and on Friday at Moorestown.

The monthly meeting of the teachers of the Riverton public school was held last week. Mr. Leynel gave a very interesting account of his visit to the public schools of St. Louis and the Wirt school at Gary, Ind. Miss H. Wolcott also gave an interesting account of her visit to the Ethical Culture and Spier schools, both of New York City.

The Board of Education have arranged to give each teacher two days for visiting other schools.

Miss Edna Thomas has been appointed to teach the "special class" until the expiration of this school term.

District School Meeting.

The questions which are giving the country at large the greatest concern at the present time are those pertaining to government in all its different phases.

There has been in the past a general feeling of chagrin in the country that the work in connection with our public affairs should be left to those who, thro a desire often for their own personal advancement or selfish gain, were most anxious to hold office.

And the men were best fitted to serve the people in positions of this nature could not be induced to take up work of this kind.

This has happily been changed during these last years of our history and we find at the present time men who are particularly fitted for public and civic duties willing to undertake the work of this nature.

We are a Borough have been fortunate in having men and women of this type on our several School Boards in the past and if they are willing to serve you unselfishly in positions which take much from them both in time and energy in order that we shall take the lead in reorganizing and conducting our school affairs.

We all feel that there is nothing we would not do for our children and the question of education is one of the most vital we have to face. We should therefore take time and consideration in the selection of those who will direct that most important time in the lives of the youth of our Borough.

We urge that you give out to the District meeting and cast your vote for the members of the Board who have unselfishly consented to allow their names to go before you for re-election, and who if elected will serve your interests in the future as they so ably have done in the past.

We feel that the work they have accomplished during the three years should be recognized and our unanimous support be given in asking them to continue the work so ably started.

Mr. Meyer, vice-president of the Board, certainly needs no further recommendation than the existing and continuous work which he did in connection with our new building.

Mr. Wagoner has always stood for all that is progressive and conservative in the administration of our school affairs.

Mr. Moore has proven by his keen common sense at all times that no mistake was made in electing him a member of the Board two years ago.

I feel that something more than merely sitting down quietly and reading this should be done to show the appreciation which rightfully belongs to these men and the least you can do is to come out in a substantial form express the feeling you have in this matter by re-electing them for a term of three years at the annual meeting of the school District to be held in the school house on Tuesday next, March 19th, at 8 p. m.

Must Not Dump Ashes on Streets.

In another column we published ordinance No. 23, prohibiting the dumping of ashes and other refuse on the streets. This subject was brought before the borough council last night by the chairman of the highway committee who said that repeated warnings to cease violating the ordinance had been disregarded, and in order that everyone might become acquainted with its provisions, it was decided to have the ordinance republished.

It was the unanimous decision of council that the ordinance must be observed, even if it is necessary to impose the fine of five dollars therein provided, in order to accomplish it.

ORDINANCE.
AN ORDINANCE for the preservation of the streets and other property of the Borough of Riverton, and to provide penalties for the violation thereof. BE IT ORDAINED by the Mayor and Council of the Borough of Riverton, New Jersey, that the following ordinance be and the same shall be in full force and effect from and after the date of its passage.

Section 1. That no person shall dump any ashes, garbage, or refuse of any kind on any street, sidewalk, or other public highway, or other property of the said Borough, or dig or remove any soil or dirt from any of said streets, highways or other property of said Borough, or injury, damage or destroy any building, lamp post, lamp, street marker or other property of said Borough.

Section 2. That any person who shall violate the provisions of the first section of this ordinance, or any of such provisions shall be liable to a fine of Five Dollars for each and every offense.

Section 3. That this ordinance shall take effect immediately upon due publication thereof.

I hereby certify that the foregoing ordinance was passed by the Mayor and Council of the Borough of Riverton at a regular meeting held at the regular meeting place of the said Mayor and Council in Riverton, N. J., July 8, A. D. 1897.

Attest: CHARLES S. WALNUT, Borough Clerk.

The foregoing ordinance approved by me July 8, 1897.

Excellent Mexican Shrimps.
The shrimps from the coast of the Gulf of Mexico are of good size, generally fully three inches in length and frequently exceeding this measurement. They are much larger than those caught on the British coast and the north Atlantic coast of the United States. They are in fine condition the year round and may be caught in the lagoons any season of the year without fear of interruption by northern, at least not for more than a day or so during any time of the year.

Proverb Amplified.
"The pen," said the ready-made philosopher, "is mightier than the sword."

"So it is," replied the Chicago beef baron; "especially if you have reference to a cattle pen."

Boy Scouts Organized.

A Council of Boy Scouts was organized in Y. M. C. A. Hall last Friday night.

Dr. W. Walter Dye, who had devoted considerable time to ascertaining how to proceed to introduce the Boy Scout movement, was made chairman of the meeting.

It was thought well to have the Council composed of about a dozen men and invitations were sent to that number to attend the meeting. Those who have so far signified their willingness to serve are: James E. Russell, Jacob P. Warner, Sam Sargent, Frank L. Dargun, Joseph W. Richards, D. W. Johnson, Dr. W. Walter Dye, E. C. Hinkle, and Raymond Shedd.

Mr. Warner was elected president, Mr. Russell vice-president, and Mr. Dargun secretary. Dr. Dye was made Scout Commissioner and Messrs. Johnson and Shedd Scout Masters.

All boys between the ages of 12 and 18 years are eligible to membership. The boys are divided into patrols of eight, one of whom becomes a patrol leader and another an assistant, and a troop consists of three patrols under the leadership of a Scout Master.

The next meeting will be held tonight in Y. M. C. A. Hall.

Application for membership may be made to Mr. Johnson or Mr. Shedd.

Fast-Presidents' Banquet.

One new member was initiated last night at the regular meeting of the P. O. S. of A. and Mrs. A. B. Powell.

F. A. Baugh was presented with gold past-president's badge by the lodge.

After the business session the annual past-president's banquet was held. The table was prettily decorated, and the favors were tiny boxes made of paper napkins and filled with candy.

Seventeen past-presidents were present at the banquet as follows: Mrs. M. M. Bowker, Mrs. B. F. Baugh, Mrs. A. V. Blackburn, Mrs. M. A. Cooke, Mrs. M. Harris, Miss Ada Miller, Mrs. Rose Roberts, Mrs. F. Reeves, Mrs. N. M. Strang, Mrs. M. Sprague, Mrs. E. Shreve, Mrs. M. J. Vaughn, Mrs. S. A. Wimer, Mrs. E. T. Zelle, Brothers G. J. Seel, W. C. Strang, G. N. Wimer.

Mrs. Baugh gave a sketch of the work done during the year, and the brothers all spoke a few words.

Reception to Rev. Williams.

A reception was tendered Rev. and Mrs. Charles Williams last evening in the Baptist Church, by the members of the Ladies Aid. An interesting musical program was arranged for the early part of the evening.

Miss Margaret Stager rendered a selection on the piano, which was followed with an anthem by the choir. Miss Ruth Brown gave a reading, and Miss Marian Reber sang. A second anthem by the choir was followed with a reading by Mrs. Dinger, after which Mr. Thilow introduced the new pastor and wife, and Ruth Branson presented Mrs. Williams with a bouquet.

Mrs. E. C. Hinkle and Mr. Thilow assisted in receiving. Refreshments were served in the basement which was decorated with white and gold, the colors of the Ladies Aid, the table being particularly attractive.

Keith's Theatre.
Just to announce that Miss Eva Tanquary, the cyclone comedienne, is to appear at Keith's Theatre with a new repertoire of songs is the signal for an ovation. Probably in no city of the country is Miss Tanquary more of a favorite than in Philadelphia, and on the occasion of each recurrent visit, her reception is immense. It is some two years now since Miss Tanquary graced a Keith program in this city, and in the meantime she has been carrying out important American cities by storm, and preparing new surprises for her friends.

Miss Tanquary has now a most perfect repertoire of songs suiting her characteristic talents, all of them composed by her corps of writers for her exclusive use. As a supreme headline attraction, Miss Tanquary's name at the top of any bill spells "Success" in large golden letters. It is otherwise a headline bill all the way through.

It includes Mr. Edwin Stevens, the distinguished character actor and interpreter of Dickens' roles, assisted by Miss Tina Marshall, the charming ingenue in a classical play called "Cousin Kitty." It is also a considerable period since Mr. Stevens honored Philadelphia, and he too will receive a very cordial reception. As an evening entertainment, Mr. Stevens has no equal in his peculiar vein.

The Mason-Kreier Co. present here for the first time a most surprising and amusing sketch which they call "On and Off," and which for strange situations and funny lines is quite out of the ordinary. The sketch starts with a laugh and ends with a roar, the denouement being entirely unexpected.

This act is sure to be a hit.

The Primrose Four—Messrs. Wright, Cantwell, Murphy and Gibner—are billed as "A Thousand Pounds of Harmony." This quartette has met with unbounded success in all the larger cities of the country on account of the quality of their voices as well as their stage presence. Everyone on the tour tips the scales at two hundred pounds or more, and a jollier quartette of entertainers never came before a Quaker City audience.

Moravian Church Notes.
Services in the Moravian Church next Sunday. Rev. Paul S. Meiner, M. A., pastor.

Delaware River League.

At The Field Club rooms, Tuesday, March 12th, the Delaware River League held its first meeting of the year, with all of the teams represented.

Represented by Schneider, who is also treasurer of the League, The Field Club was represented by their portly manager, Thomas Griffenberg, Harry Acker, and F. L. Durgin. Bill Lynch and Sam MacMullin did the talking for Riverton and last, but not least, Mike Halsinger, one of last season's arbiters, was there with the hot stuff from Delair.

As both President Rue and Vice-President Tucker were unable to be on hand, the first piece of business was to elect a chairman. Bales Craft, of Palmyra, was unanimously elected and he immediately appointed James T. Wear as secretary pro tem.

After the reading of the previous minutes the re-organizing committee gave an example for their work the well-filled room and the representatives of the different teams.

As soon as the new business was opened there were four applications made to enter the Delaware River League. These applications were made by Bishop for Florence F. C., Holland for Beverly, Jones of Delair, and Wade of Fairhill, of Riverton, but Florence and Beverly withdrew their applications as soon as they were told about the division of the gate receipts.

The plan of division as used last year by the League was: home team 60 per cent., visiting team 40 per cent. This question caused no little argument and a very good example was given in the case of Delair A. A. F. Baugh was presented with gold past-president's badge by the lodge.

After the business session the annual past-president's banquet was held. The table was prettily decorated, and the favors were tiny boxes made of paper napkins and filled with candy.

Professor Kennedy of Edinburgh University describes a hitherto unknown MS. of the Old Testament which he names the Codex Edinburgensis, which he has discovered in the Advocates Library, Edinburgh. It is said that for size, conditions and calligraphy it has few rivals among similar MSS. in any library in the world.

TRENTON STORMED BY SUFFRAGETTES

Monday They Flocked in to Boost Amendment.

FITZHERBERT STILL HOLDS ON

What to Do With Senator Found Guilty of Attempted Extortion a Puzzle in Upper House—Republicans Fear Inability to Expel—Democrats Support Physician.

(Special Correspondence.)
Trenton, N. J., March 14.—Suffragettes, or, as one alleged was of the house dubbed them, "sufferin' yets," were much in evidence in and about the statehouse on Monday. A special train out of Jersey City brought them from that city, Newark, Elizabeth and intermediate stations to Trenton, where they were joined by large delegations from South Jersey.

Ignoring the rain which was falling, and the sleet that covered the streets, they formed a sort of procession and marched to the statehouse, fully a mile away. Most of them carried small yellow flags bearing the name of their organization in black letters, while two were seen bearing the name of a large yellow banner inscribed "Votes for Women." Arriving at the capitol, the suffragettes thronged the corridors of both chambers, and some of them did a thriving business selling the flags of their movement. The object of the fair ones' descent upon Trenton was to help along a constitutional amendment now pending before the legislature for giving the ballot to women. The senate committee on judiciary which has the amendment in its keeping gave a hearing to the women on the morning of the hearing in the senate chamber, but so small was that place that it was entirely inadequate to accommodate the vast throng of suffragettes and others who wished to attend, so the hearing took place in the assembly chamber.

Senator Edge of Atlantic presided and started the proceedings by remarking that all there was to be said upon the subject could not be said in an hour, and that no longer than an hour would be extended to an hour and a half, whereas there was much clapping of gloved hands and agitated waving of the yellow and black flags.

Speakers Are Cheered.
The first speaker was Mrs. George Vickers, wife of the assistant prosecutor of Hudson, and she introduced as the first speaker Miss Clara B. Laddy of the legislative committee of the New Jersey State Suffragist association. Miss Laddy explained the objects of the association and made a speech which was frequently interrupted by the delighted shrieks of approbation from the gathered suffragettes.

While Miss Malinda Scott of the Trimmers' association was eloquently advocating the cause, a woman in the back part of the room jumped up shouting, "I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman."

"What is your point of order?" asked Chairman Edge.

"I object to the chairman's chair being occupied by a partisan flag," Mr. Edge looked around and saw that the back of his chair had swung over it a yellow flag bearing the slogan, "Votes for Women."

The senator at the point was well taken and removed the flag.

Mrs. Henry Villard, wife of the New York millionaire banker, the next speaker, urged the adoption of the amendment, and Mrs. Jack Fielder of Trenton struck the only discordant note by violently opposing the whole scheme of giving the ballot to women.

After the hearing the suffragettes thoroughly inspected the statehouse, and a large delegation called upon the governor.

Fitzherbert Case Puzzling.
What will be done with Richard Fitzherbert, the senator from Morris county, who by a strict party vote of yesterday refused to support the bill of conduct unbecoming a senator in connection with the negotiations looking to the killing for a consideration of two senate bills having for their object the prohibition of the manufacture and use of acetone gas in this state, is the all-absorbing question around the statehouse these days.

Although a bare majority was sufficient to direct the senate to expel him, and to secure this two-thirds it will be necessary for the Republicans to induce three Democrats to vote with them. It is not conceivable that that can be done, as all the Democratic senators except Fitzherbert himself, who did not vote, voted that he was not guilty, and they will not be likely to acknowledge that they were wrong by turning around and voting to punish the Morris senator for something which they have declared he did not do.

So what will be done with the Morris senator is a puzzle. All sorts of suggestions are being put forward by all sorts of people. It has been urged that he be removed from all committees and be not allowed to introduce bills, and in reply to this it is said that as long as he remains the representative of Morris county in the senate he cannot be deprived of any of the rights and privileges of a senator, for if he was it would practically amount to depriving the sovereign county of Morris of a representative in the upper chamber of the legislature.

Party Politics a Feature.
Another suggestion is that Mr. Fitzherbert's fellow senators practically ostracize him until he resigns his position, so keenly that he will resign. No one believes that enough votes can be secured in the senate to expel the Morris senator. His expulsion would cease the election of a senator to fill his place, and an election in Morris, all experts agree, would result in the election of a Republican, who would represent the county in the senate next year. In view of this it is not expected that any Democrat can be induced to vote for expulsion.

In the senate there was a sharp fight over Mr. Gaunt's bill which exempts farm hands and domestic servants from the operation of the workmen's compensation act of last year. If the act should pass, Senator Edge declared it would completely destroy the par-pose of the act of last year, as farm hands and domestic servants represent fully 50 per cent of the state's body of employees. Housewives who before the bill was passed looked after their injured servants, he declared, were not affected by the bill, and those who do not should be compelled to do so.

Senator Gehlbach approved the bill because, he said, it tended to weaken the effect of last year's act, which he opposed and against which he was the only senator who voted.

It was always he opposed, he declared, "to a measure which holds an employer responsible for an injury to an employee to which he does not contribute."

Senator Smalley of Somerset and Senator Hand of Cape May also favored the passage of the bill, but it was laid over.

The bill to place osteopathy upon a level with other schools of medicine in this state, which crops up every year as regularly as the session comes round, occupied a prominent part in Monday's proceedings when a hearing was given upon the measure by the house committee. The hearing was tame as compared with those on similar measures in past years, although at times it was lively enough.

Dr. Britton D. Evans of "Brain-Work" fame was the principal speaker against the measure.

No Votes Up to Date.
Governor Wilson disposed of a large batch of bills which were placed on his desk this week. Up to date he has not vetoed a measure, although the increasing salary of Mayor Mayors of Newark from $5,000 to $10,000 had a narrow escape. The governor had prepared a veto message to send to the house with the bill.

Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Fletcher, heard of it and, by some tall hustling, managed to have the measure recast before the message got in.

Among the bills signed by the governor were:

The Leavitt bill permitting the state to mark Washington crossing.

The Leavitt bill to authorize the statehouse commission to sell the voting machines which have been rejected by the people of the state.

Senate 18, Mr. Hand—Appropriates $300,000 to complete the construction of the inland waterway through New Jersey.

Senate 28, Mr. Johnson—Allows a stepfather or stepmother to adopt a child.

Senate 34, Mr. Fielder—Provides that bail upon which no process has been issued within a period of six years will no longer be a lien against real estate.

Senate 35, Mr. Fielder—Provides that all papers in county offices of all kinds which have been recopied or transcribed in typewriting shall have the same legal effect as if in handwriting.

Senate 41, Mr. Leavitt—Prohibits outside firms from making contracts for prison labor and specifies that the state alone shall profit from this class of labor.

Senate 50, Mr. Fielder—Pending an appeal in condemnation suits it allows petitioner to take possession of the land.

Senate 58, Mr. Edge—Requires that more than two kinds of surfacing material shall be specified in paving ordinances.

Senate 98, Mr. Hand—Prohibits travel at more than five miles an hour over road bridges.

Senate 123, Mr. Smalley—Authorizes the construction of improved roads by the board of managers of any state institution.

Senate 150, Mr. Silver—Authorizes the trustees of the State Agricultural college to provide additional buildings when necessary.

Senate 180, Mr. Leavitt—Authorizes the state house commission to condemn and sell all voting machines now stored in the statehouse.

Senate 190, Mr. Leavitt—Authorizes the statehouse commission to make alterations in the station for the accommodation of the departments and the transfer of land at the New Jersey capitol; carries an appropriation of $70,000.

Senate 201, Mr. Leavitt—Provides for state hospital for insane for land owned by the Trenton Country club.

Senate 214, Mr. Fielder—Provides for the enforcement of ordinances by shade tree commissions.

These bills have been passed in the senate.

Old Volume Sold.
Bunyan's copy of Foxe's "Book of Martyrs" was offered at auction at Messrs. Sotheby's rooms in London recently. There were only two bids, and the book was finally bought in at $3,000. The vendors were the trustees of the Bedford Literary Institute. The book was to have been sold in London last May, the institute being in financial difficulties. It was expected to realize from $40,000 to $50,000. At the last moment, however, the attorney general intervened in order to ascertain whether the trustees were empowered with the right to sell the book, and it was withdrawn from the sale. After investigation the attorney general came to the conclusion that the sale could not be withdrawn, and consequently the book came under the hammer. A first edition of Walton's "Complete Angler," published in 1653, at 35 cents, fetched $3,750.

Drainage of the Zuyder Zee.
A great project is again before the people of Holland—the draining of the Zuyder Zee. The sea, which, as every one knows, is at the north of Holland and covers an area of 50,000 hectares, a hectare being practically two acres and a half.

Just half a century ago a scheme to drain the southern portion of the sea was first mooted and although it received considerable support, the opposition was greater, but now an association has been formed and a bill will be introduced into the chamber. The promoters see that with an increased population means must be taken to enlarge the country and this reclamation of the sea is suggested as capable of accomplishment. If the sea is conquered there are several lakes which can be dealt with later.

Rate Schedule Lacking.
It was the day before Christmas in one of the big railroad offices, says the San Francisco Call. They were talking about the good old days when they were all children and there was no interstate commerce commission.

"Well," observed the optimist, "I guess old Santa will come around as usual."

"Nope," replied the grouch. "Don't look for him this year."

"Why not?" asked the optimist.

"Well," came the answer, "under the new law he's a common carrier, and the old man hasn't filed his rate schedule."

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—The scene at the opening of the story is in the library of an old worn-out plantation, known as the Barron. The place is to be sold, and its history is that of the owners, the Quinners, is the subject of discussion by a group of men, including a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and a young man, Yancy. Yancy, a mysterious child of the old southern aristocracy, is the subject of much conversation. Yancy tells how he was adopted by the Quinners.

CHAPTER II.—Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barron, but the Quinners deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep himself out of the way, goes to the Quinners, and appears and asks questions about the Barron.

CHAPTER III.—Trouble at Barron Hill. Yancy's home, when Hannibal is kidnapped by Dave Murray, friend and agent. Yancy overrules Bladen, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy.

CHAPTER IV.—Yancy is served with a warrant for the kidnapping of the boy. Yancy appears before Judge Bladen, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff.

CHAPTER V.—Betty Malroy, a friend of the Quinners, has an encounter with Captain Murray, who is disguised as a stranger on her, and is rescued by Yancy Carrington, who threatens to whip the captain.

CHAPTER VI.—Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes her to the Barron, where she disappears with Murray on her trail. He overtakes her in the mountains of Tennessee. Murray gets Yancy drunk and takes him to a den that followed. Hannibal escapes in a canoe.

CHAPTER VII.—Hannibal arrives at the Barron. The judge recognizes him as the boy who was kidnapped. Hannibal tells of the kidnapping of Yancy's body. Price arrested, counterfeited.

CHAPTER VIII.—Carrington and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Carrington is playing for big stakes.

CHAPTER IX.—Hannibal's rifle. Carrington is playing for big stakes. Carrington is playing for big stakes.

CHAPTER X.—Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on the raft. Carrington is playing for big stakes.

any, Miss Betty?"

"I don't know about that. Do boats usually leak, Hannibal?"

"Why, you ain't ever been out rowing her, Miss Betty, have you?—and there ain't no better fun than rowing a boat!" They had started down the path.

"I used to think that, too, Hannibal; how do you suppose it is that when people grow up they forget all about the really nice things they might do?"

"What use is she if you don't go rowing in her?" persisted Hannibal.

"Oh, but it is used. Mr. Tom uses it in crossing to the other side where they are clearing land for cotton. It saves him a long walk or ride about the head of the bayou."

"Like I should take you out in her, Miss Betty?" demanded Hannibal with palpitating anxiety.

They had entered the scattering timber when Betty paused suddenly with a startled exclamation, and then a faint smile came over her face.

"But, no matter what you do, they are very, very kind to you?" she continued tremulously.

"Yes, ma'am—why, Miss Betty, you're lovely men!"

"And do you ever hear the things spoken of you learned about at Mrs. Ferris' Sunday-school?"

"The Sunday-school?" she asked. "The judge is drunk he talks a heap about 'em. It's beautiful to hear him then; you'd love it, Miss Betty," and Hannibal smiled up sweetly into her face.

"Does he ever go to Sunday-school in Raleigh?"

The boy shook his head.

"I ain't got no clothes that'll fit to wear, nor no pennies to give, but the judge, he says to go to go, and he's learning me my letters—but we ain't a book. Miss Betty, I reckon it'd stump you some to guess how he fixed it for me to learn?"

"He's drawn the letters for you, is that the way?" In spite of herself, Betty was experiencing a certain revulsion of feeling where the judge and Murray were concerned. They were doubtless had enough, but they could have been worse.

"No, ma'am; he done soaked the label off one of Mr. Pegloe's whisky bottles and pasted it on the wall just as high as my chin, so I can see it good, and he's learning me that-a-way. Maybe you've seen the kind of bottle I mean—Pegloe's Mississippi Pilot; Pure Corn Whisky." But Hannibal was quick to see that the educational system devised by the judge did not impress Betty at all favorably. She drew him into her arms.

"You shall have my books—the books I learned to read out of when I was a little girl, Hannibal!"

"I'll learn from the label pretty well," said Hannibal loyally.

"But you'll learn the books better, dear, when you see them. I know just where they are, for I happened on them on a shelf in the library only the other day."

After they had found and examined the books and Hannibal had grudgingly admitted that they might possess certain points of advantage over the label, he and Betty went out for a walk. It was now late afternoon and the sun was sinking behind the wall of the forest that rose along the Arkansas coast. Their steps had led them to the terrace—where they stood looking out into the west. It was here that Betty had said good-by to Bruce Carrington—it might have been months ago, and it was only days. She thought of Carrington—she thought of the books better, dear, when you see them. I know just where they are, for I happened on them on a shelf in the library only the other day."

"You needn't be afraid, I got something important to say."

Tom, in spite of his vexed mood, had taken note of earlier in the day.

"You are Bess Hicks," said Betty.

"Make the boy go back toward the house a spell—I got something I want to say to you," Betty hesitated. She was afraid of the judge's manner, which was as rude as her speech. "I ain't going to hurt you—you needn't be afraid of me. I got something important to say—send him off, I tell you; then I'll have no time to lose."

The girl stamped her foot impatiently.

Betty made a sign to Hannibal and he passed slowly back along the path. He went unwillingly, and he kept his head down, but he might see what was done, even if he were not to hear what was said.

"That will do, Hannibal—wait there—don't go any farther," Betty called after him when he had reached the point sufficiently distant to be out of hearing of a conversation carried on in an ordinary tone. "Now, what is it? Speak quickly if you have anything to tell me."

"I got a heap to say," answered the girl with a scowl. Her manner was still fierce and repellent, and she gave Betty a certain jealous regard out of her black eyes which she later was to learn to explain. "Where's Mr. Tom?" she demanded.

"Tom? Why, about the place, I suppose—in his office, perhaps." So Tom to do with the judge, Hannibal had not come back; if he hurry we may meet him on the road.

"No, he ain't about the place, either! He done struck out for Memphis two hours after sun-up, and what's more, he ain't coming back here to-night—!" There was a moment of silence. The girl looked about apprehensively. She continued, fixing her black eyes on Betty: "You're here, ain't you? You know what happened when Mr. Tom started for Memphis last time—I reckon you ain't forgot that?"

Betty felt a pallor steal over her face. She rested a hand that shook on the trunk of a tree to steady herself. The girl laughed shortly.

"Don't be so scared; I reckon Belle Plain's as good as his if anything happened to you."

By a great effort Betty gained a measure of control over herself. She took a step nearer and looked the girl steadily in the face.

"Perhaps you will stop this sort of talk, and tell me what is going to happen to me—if you know?" she said quietly.

"You reckon Mr. Norton was shot? I can tell you why—it was all along of you—that was why! The girl's furtive glance, which searched and watched the gathering shadows, came back as it always did to Betty's pale face. "You ain't no sinner, but he was, I tell you, and he's stuck in his breath sharply between her full red lips.

"What do you mean?" faltered Betty.

"Do you reckon you're safe here in the big house alone? Why do you reckon Mr. Tom cleared out for Memphis? It was because he couldn't be around and have anything happen to you—that was why!—and the girl sank her voice to a whisper. "You quit Belle Plain now—tonight—just as soon as you can!"

"This is absurd—you are trying to frighten me!"

"Did they stop trying to frighten me?" demanded Betty, with harsh insistence.

Whatever the promptings that inspired this warning, they plainly had sympathy. Her dominating emotion seemed to be a sudden sort of resentment which lit up her face with a dull fire; yet her feelings were so clearly and so keenly personal that Betty understood the motive.

"The explanation, she found, left her wondering just where and how her own fate was linked with that of this poor white. "You have been waiting some time to see me?" she asked.

"Ever since about noon."

"You were afraid to come to the house?"

"I didn't want to be seen there."

"And yet you knew I was alone."

"Alone—but how do you know who's watching the place?"

"Do you think there was reason to be afraid of that?" asked Betty.

"The girl stamped her foot with angry impetuosity.

"You're just wastin' time—just foolin' it away—and you ain't got none to spare!"

"You must tell me what I have to fear—I must know more or I shall stay just where I am!"

"Well, then, stay!" The girl turned away, and then as quickly turned back. "You must carry this, Hannibal; he'd kill me if he knew—I reckon he'll earn that alias!"

"Of what are you speaking?"

"Hell have you away from here to-night!"

"He? Who? Who? . . . and what if I refuse to go?"

"Did they ask Charlie Norton whether he wanted to live or die?"

A shiver passed through Betty. She was seeing it all again—Charlie as he groped among the graves with the hand of death heavy upon him.

A moment later she was alone. The girl had disappeared. There were only the shifting shadows as the wind tossed the branches of the trees, and the bands of golden light that slanted along the empty path. The fear of the unknown leaped up afresh in Betty's soul; in an instant flying feet had borne her to the boy's side.

"Come—come quick, Hannibal!" she gasped out, and seized his hand. "What is it, Miss Betty? What's the matter?" asked Hannibal as they fled panting up the terraces.

"I don't know—only we must get away from here just as soon as we can!" Then, seeing the look of alarm on the girl's face, she added more quietly, "Don't be frightened, dear, only we must get away from Belle Plain at once." But where they were to go, she had not considered.

"You shall have my books—the books I learned to read out of when I was a little girl, Hannibal!"

"I'll learn from the label pretty well," said Hannibal loyally.

"But you'll learn the books better, dear, when you see them. I know just where they are, for I happened on them on a shelf in the library only the other day."

"This is absurd—you are trying to frighten me!"

"Did they stop trying to frighten me?" demanded Betty, with harsh insistence.

"Oh, Hannibal, Hannibal, what can he do there—what can any one do there?" And a dead pallor overspread the girl's face. To speak of the blind groping of her friends but seemed to fix the horror of their situation in her mind.

"I don't know, Miss Betty, but the judge is always thinking of things to do; and he's mostly things to do no one else would ever think of."

Betty had placed the candle on the stool and seated herself on one of the beds. There was the murmur of voices in the room below; she wondered if her fate was under consideration and what that fate was to be. Hannibal, who had been examining the window, returned to her side.

"Miss Betty, if we could just get out of this lot we could steal their stuff and row down to the river; I reckon they got just the one boat; the only way they could get to it would be to swim out, and if they done that we could pull 'em over the head with the oars—the least little thing sinks you when you're in the water." But this murderous fancy of his failed to interest Betty.

Presently they heard Shorrod and Bunker come up from the shore with George. Shorrod joined them and there was a brief discussion, then an interval of silence, and the sound of voices again as the three white men moved back across the field in the direction of the bayou. There succeeded a period of utter stillness, both in the house and in the clearing, a somber hush that plunged Betty yet deeper in despair. Wild thoughts assailed her, thoughts against which she struggled with all the strength of her mind.

In that hour of stress Hannibal was sustained by his faith in the judge. He saw his patron's powerful and picturesque intelligence applied to the mystery of the case, and in solving the mystery of the case, it was inconceivable that this could prove otherwise than disastrous to Mr. Shorrod, and he endeavored to share the confidence he was feeling with Betty, but there was something so forced and unnatural in the girl's voice and manner when she discussed his conjectures that he quickly fell into an awkward silence.

"I will go no farther!" said Betty in desperation. She felt an overwhelming fear, the full horror of the unknown lay hold of her, and she gave a piercing cry for help. Shorrod swung about on his heel and seized her. For a moment she struggled to escape, but the man's big hand plinked her. "No more of that!" he warned, then he recovered himself and laughed. "You could yell till you was black in the face, ma'am, and there'd be no one to hear you."

"Where are you taking me?" and Betty's voice faltered between the sudden sob that choked her.

"Just across to George Hicks'."

"For what purpose?"

"You'll know in plenty of time." And Shorrod leered at her through the darkness.

"Hannibal is to go with me?" asked Betty tremulously.

"Sure," agreed Shorrod affably.

"You nigger, too—quite a party."

Betty stepped into the skirt. She felt her hopes quiver—she was thinking of Bess; whatever the girl's motives, she had wished her to escape. She would wish it now more than ever since the very thing she had striven to prevent had happened.

Shorrod seated himself and took up the oars, Bunker followed with Hannibal and the three white men were spoken into their disembarked on the opposite shore, when Shorrod addressed Bunker.

"I reckon I can manage that young rascal; you go back after Shorrod and the nigger," he said.

He conducted his captives up the bank and they entered a clearing. Looking across this Betty saw where a cabin, a window framed a single square of light. They advanced toward this and presently the dark outline of the cabin itself became distinguishable. A moment later Shorrod opened a door and they entered. Hand and Betty and the boy were thrust into the room where Murray had held his conference with Fentress and Ware. The two women were now its only occupants, and the mother, gross and shapely, turned an expressionless face on the intruders; but the daughter shrank into the shadow, her burning glance fixed on Betty.

"Here's yo' burning, old lady!" said Mr. Shorrod. Mrs. Hicks rose from the three-legged stool on which she was sitting.

"Hand me the candle, Bess," she ordered.

At one side of the room was a steep flight of stairs which gave access to the loft overhead. Mrs. Hicks, by a gesture, signified that Betty and Hannibal were to ascend these stairs; they did so and found themselves on a narrow landing inclosed by a partition of rough planks; this partition was pierced by a low door. Mrs. Hicks, who had followed close at their heels, handed the candle to Betty.

"In yonder!" she said briefly, nodding toward the door.

"Wait!" cried Betty in a whisper. "No," said the woman with an almost masculine firmness of tone. "I got nothing to say." She pushed them into the attic, and closing the door, fastened it with a stout wooden bar.

Beyond that door, which seemed to have closed on every hope, Betty held the tallow dip light, and by its uncertain and flickering light surveyed her prison. The briefest glance sufficed. The room contained two shake-down beds and a stool; there was a window in the gable, but a piece of heavy plank was spiked before it.

"Miss Betty, don't you be scared," whispered Hannibal. "When the judge hears we're gone, him and Mr. Ma-haffy, they'll be here in a minute."

Mr. Shorrod laughed loudly and indulgently.

"You ain't, if you don't want to work, I'm mean enough to tote you. We ain't far to go, and I've tackled jobs I'd a heap less heart to in my time," he concluded gallantly. From the opposite side of the carriage Bunker swore nervously. He desired to know if they were to stand there talking all night. "Shut your filthy mouth, Bunker, and see you keep tight hold of that young rip-staver," said Shorrod, who was perfectly satisfied with his dealings with his slave.

"You tried to kill my Uncle Bob at the tavern, you and Captain Murray. I heard you, and I seen you drag him out the river," cried Hannibal. Shorrod gave a start of astonishment at this.

"Why, ain't he hateful?" he exclaimed again. "See here, young fellow, that's no kind of a way for you to talk to a man who has his ten children!"

Again Bunker swore, while Jim Tom Shorrod to make haste. This popular chieftain was sitting on a day beside a fountain with a Bar Harbor girl.

"Here's yo' Guests, Old Woman!"

harry will try to find us. They'll go right off to Belle Plain—the judge is always wanting to do that, only Mr. Ma-haffy never lets him—but now he won't be able to stop him."

"Yes," he admitted, "my dress is pretty, and one queer thing about it is that it has no buttons—only knots and knotholes."

He showed her the fastenings of his flame colored jacket.

"What kind of knots are yours?" the young girl asked.

"Mine?" he replied. "Oh, mine are just the usual married man's knots."

"And what are they called?" she pursued.

"Knots of resignation," he answered, with a sigh.

"Natural kindheartedness and Law of Gravitation Responsible for Apparent Theft of Chicken."

A negro was once haled into court in a Mississippi town for the theft of a fancy chicken. The chicken in question was in the bag in which it was found at the time of the arrest. When asked if he had anything to say in his own defense, the negro replied: "O' co'se I is. I ain't stole dat chicken. My natchel kindheartedness an' de law ob gravitation done put de chicken in de bag."

A further explanation being deemed necessary by the magistrate, the prisoner stated: "I was agolpe through de lumber yard an' I picked up er plank. It didn't have no tickler value an' de white folks ain't er goin' ter grudge de pore nigger de plank. I ain't took no no-tice dat de plank was er plank. I had er bag under my arm, ter disbursements what I had de bag for, but I was er goin' along an' I seed dat chicken er settin' on dat limb what had lee all over it. An' de chicken ash' was co'se, den my natchel kindheartedness, what I done tote you about, got de bes' uv me an' I done put de plank 'longside uv de chicken. An' he sho' was grateful fer dat warn plank to me an' on. Now I never noticed dat de en' uv de plank what was on de ground' was in de bag, an' when de chicken step on dat plank de law uv gravitation done ketch hold er him an' he throwed him in de bag. Wat heas, I'tt seme like de han' uv Providence done put de chicken in de bag. An' I just took him an' walked off wid him, but boss, I ain't never stole dat chicken. Dead I never did."

"EIGHTS" ARE THEIR HOODOOS

Postal Clerks Say Stamps of That Denomination Cause Them Much Financial Loss.

When a meek little man stepped up to the stamp window in a branch office and asked for an eight cent stamp he caused as much consternation as if he had demanded "your money or your life."

All the clerks came to the window to take a look at him. They muttered to one another and made strange and fantastic signs, crossed their fingers, knicked on wood and did various other things that he supposed to drive away evil spirits.

"We're just out of eight cent stamps," a clerk finally stammered. "Got lots of two and ones."

"Well, gimme a five and a three," said the meek little man, upon receiving which he paid for them and departed.

What's the matter with the clerks?" queried an inquisitive spectator.

The stamp clerk was still too nervous to answer, but one of the others said, with a smile: "Eight's are hoodoos. None of the small offices handle them if they can help it. It's this way: They are just a few shade different in color from the ones and it is no infrequent thing for a stamp clerk in a hurry to hand out a lot of eights when ones are asked and paid for. It always costs him seven cents a stamp when he does it. The clerk here the other day, during the rush hour, when the offices are closing, was called upon for a dollar's worth of ones. He handed out a hundred eights instead. Cost him seven dollars. Then he got rid of all the rest of the eights and now he won't have anything to do with eights. Even says 'eaten' instead of 'ate.'"

Herring on Maine Coast.

It is now fully evident that no more herring will be caught on the Maine coast until spring. There have been practically none landed within the last three weeks, but the recent snow will stop any that might be along this way.

It is a singular fact, but the herring are as abundant after there has been a good fall of snow. It is reasoned that the snow causes the feed to sink and so the small fish do not show themselves on the surface after it has fallen into the water.—Portland Press.

"You Needn't Be Afraid, I Got Something Important to Say."

Tom, in spite of his vexed mood, had taken note of earlier in the day.

"You are Bess Hicks," said Betty.

"Make the boy go back toward the house a spell—I got something I want to say to you," Betty hesitated. She was afraid of the judge's manner, which was as rude as her speech. "I ain't going to hurt you—you needn't be afraid of me. I got something important to say—send him off, I tell you; then I'll have no time to lose."

The girl stamped her foot impatiently.

Betty made a sign to Hannibal and he passed slowly back along the path. He went unwillingly, and he kept his head down, but he might see what was done, even if he were not to hear what was said.

"That will do, Hannibal—wait there—don't go any farther," Betty called after him when he had reached the point sufficiently distant to be out of hearing of a conversation carried on in an ordinary tone. "Now, what is it? Speak quickly if you have anything to tell me."

"I got a heap to say," answered the girl with a scowl. Her manner was still fierce and repellent, and she gave Betty a certain jealous regard out of her black eyes which she later was to learn to explain. "Where's Mr. Tom?" she demanded.

"Tom? Why, about the place, I suppose—in his office, perhaps." So Tom to do with the judge, Hannibal had not come back; if he hurry we may meet him on the road.

"No, he ain't about the place, either! He done struck out for Memphis two hours after sun-up, and what's more, he ain't coming back here to-night—!" There was a moment of silence. The girl looked about apprehensively. She continued, fixing her black eyes on Betty: "You're here, ain't you? You know what happened when Mr. Tom started for Memphis last time—I reckon you ain't forgot that?"

Betty felt a pallor steal over her face. She rested a hand that shook on the trunk of a tree to steady herself. The girl laughed shortly.

"Don't be so scared; I reckon Belle Plain's as good as his if anything happened to you."

By a great effort Betty gained a measure of control over herself. She took a step nearer and looked the girl steadily in the face.

"Perhaps you will stop this sort of talk, and tell me what is going to happen to me—if you know?" she said quietly.

"You reckon Mr. Norton was shot? I can tell you why—it was all along of you—that was why! The girl's furtive glance, which searched and watched the gathering shadows, came back as it always did to Betty's pale face. "You ain't no sinner, but he was, I tell you, and he's stuck in his breath sharply between her full red lips.

"What do you mean?" faltered Betty.

"Do you reckon you're safe here in the big house alone? Why do you reckon Mr. Tom cleared out for Memphis? It was because he couldn't be around and have anything happen to you—that was why!—and the girl sank her voice to a whisper. "You quit Belle Plain now—tonight—just as soon as you can!"

"This is absurd—you are trying to frighten me!"

"Did they stop trying to frighten me?" demanded Betty, with harsh insistence.

this they came to the corn-field which lay between the house and the high road. Following one of the shadows they hurried to the mouth of the lane.

"Hannibal, I don't want to tell the judge why I'm leaving Belle Plain. I don't want the woman, I mean," said Betty.

"You reckon they'd kill her, don't you, Miss Betty, if they knew what she'd done?" speculated the boy. It occurred to him that the shock of the revelation of their flight would require preparation, since the judge was at all times singularly alive to the slightest discrepancy of statement. They had issued from the corn-field and

LARK OF BRITISH DUCHESS
Her Grace of Sutherland Danced at London Masked Ball in Male Attire.

A carefully concealed sensation of the brilliant "Arabian Nights Ball," given at Covent Garden, came to light in London when it was learned that among the glittering throng of oriental dancers was her grace the duchess of Sutherland in male attire—that of a maharajah. The incident was deemed so serious that a family council was called at Stafford house, the magnificent Sutherland residence, in St. James street.

But it was not the duke who caused the trouble, but the earl of Roslyn, the countess's brother, who ordered his sister to "give an account of herself." The duchess took umbrage at this style of censor and citing his somewhat tardy career as his defence. "I would like to know," she is reported to have said, "who appointed you as censor of this family's morals; so don't talk rot."

A cross-examination elicited from the duchess the fact that while she did wear a man's clothes at the ball and also painted her face to a swarthy hue to resemble the eastern potentate, her trousers were very baggy and a cloak enveloped her figure.

So at the conclusion of the inquisition the duchess figured that the earl of Roslyn owed her an apology. "You see it was all perfectly innocent," she said, "and done just for a lark. You really should get down on your knees to me for stirring up such a fuss."

DID MOSES MAKE MISTAKE?
First Chapter of Genesis Conforms in Many Instances With Late Discoveries in Science.

We have often heard "the mistakes of Moses" in the first chapter of Genesis commented upon, but what especially strikes us in that chapter is not its contraventions of science, but its harmonies with late discoveries. How did the writer, many centuries before the story of the rocks had been deciphered, know that there was a beginning and then a pause before life appeared on the earth? Who taught the writer that the earth was "without form and void" before it was divided into continents? How came it that the long delayed, slow emergence of land should be set forth as it is? Was it mere guesswork that prompted the writer to say grasses were created before animals, and not for animals already existent? Is it a happy accident that life in the water appears before life on the land? And ages before the scientist dreamed of paleontology did first man live in the series just as he appears today by his remains in the drift found in the stratified rocks? Further investigation may explain discrepancies, but what except inspiration can account for these coincidences?—The Advance.

He returned home from school the other day to spend the holidays, as I supposed, and entering my office, he threw his hat on the floor, selected an easy-chair, put his feet on my desk, lit a cigar, inhaled a few puffs, and then, turning languidly to me, he drawled:

"I say, dad, do you remember the time when you were expelled from school?"
"I did. There was no denying it, for one day in a burst of confidence I had told him some of my escapades as a boy, and lived to regret that I had been so indiscreet."
"Well," said he, "history has repeated itself."
"What do you mean, you rascal?" I roared.
"Oh," said he, easily, "I've been expelled, too. Astonishing, isn't it, dad, how such things will run in a fam-

HOW SHARK IS HARNESSSED

Trick by Which Sallor Pays Debt to Merchants Member of the Finny Tribe.

The shark's jaws are pried open to the fullest extent; a stout eight-foot spar of tough timber, four inches by four in cross-measurement, is fixed transversely far back in the angle of the jaw, the ends projecting on either side. A strong rope leading from the ends of the spar is drawn close and tightened, with a clove-hitch round the fish's tail, behind the wide tail flukes. It is thus the sailor harnesses his enemy.

The clamp of the cruel jaws drives the two-inch long teeth deep into the tough spar. The tight line holds it in place, and, struggle as he may, the shark fails to move the spar an inch from its position. As a finishing touch, the sailor drew his knife blade across the shark's eyeballs and let him go.

BEING BRISK A GOOD HABIT

Children Should Be Taught Quickness in Running Errands and in Dressing Themselves.

If a child is allowed to acquire a slow, dawdling manner when told to do any particular duty it will be found very difficult to effect a cure, and this means a serious hindrance to success in after years.

Teach them while very young to do everything promptly and to finish what they have commenced. If they are sent on a message make them to clearly understand that they must go direct to the shop and not loiter on the way. Children may be seen at any time carrying a message and lingering to look at everything on the way.

At a later age for any running about the house until fully dressed—and quickly dressed. Some little maidens are rather fond of looking in the glass while dressing and this is a habit which should be at once repressed. It not only encourages vanity but it causes the child to waste much valuable time.

"No wonder, then, the weedy little chap cut me," the editor concluded. "But I'll get even with him. I'll snap-shot him in his bathing suit and send the picture to the illustrated papers read by ladies and children. This will cause his sales to fall off at least 80 per cent."—London Tit-Bits.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

know about the boy?" Hicks was silent, but he was grateful for the judge's question. From Tom Ware he had learned of Pentress's interest in the boy. Why should he shelter the colonel at risk of himself? "If you please, Mr. Cavendish," said the judge, nodding toward the knife.

"You didn't ask me about him," said Hicks quickly.

"Let him up, Mr. Cavendish; that's all we want to know," said the judge.

"Mr. Cavendish—" again the judge glanced toward the knife.

"Wait," cried Hicks. "You go to Colonel Pentress."

seemed to hesitate; but the judge's glance, compelling and insistent, demanded an answer.

"Ten years."

"You have known many men of all classes as a lawyer and a planter?"

"The judge," Pentress inclined his head. The judge took a step nearer him. "People have a great trick of coming and going in these western states—all sort of damned raffia drift in and out of these new lands."

A deadly earnestness lifted the judge's words above mere rudeness. Pentress, cold and distant, made no reply.

"For the past twenty years I have been looking for a man by the name of Gatewood—David Gatewood."

Disciplined as he was, the colonel started violently. "Ever heard of him, Pentress?" demanded the judge with a savage scowl.

"What's all this to me?" The words came with a gasp from Pentress's twitching lips. The judge looked at him moodily and frowning.

"I have reason to think this man Gatewood came to west Tennessee," he said.

"If so, I have never heard of him."

"Perhaps not under that name—at any rate, but are you going to hear of him now?"

This man Gatewood, who between themselves was a damned scoundrel—the colonel winced—"this man Gatewood had a friend who threw money and business in his way—a planter he was, name as Gatewood. A sort of partnership existed between the pair. It proved an expensive enterprise for Gatewood's friend, since he came to trust the damned scoundrel more and more as time passed—even large sums of his money were in Gatewood's hands."

Pentress's countenance was like stone, as expressions of his mind remained unaltered.

By the door stood Mahaffy with Yancy and Cavendish; they understood that what was obscure and meaningless to them held a tragic significance to these two men. The judge's heavy face, ordinarily battered and debauched, but infinitely good-natured, bore now the markings of deep passion, and the voice that came from his lips was a hoarse, guttural cry.

"This friend of Gatewood's had a wife—" The judge's voice broke, emotion about him like a veil; he was tearing open his wounds. He reached over and poured himself a drink, sucking it down with greedy lips. "There was a wife," he whirled about on his heels and faced Pentress again. "This was a wife, Pentress—"

"He fixed Pentress with his blazing eyes. "A wife and child. Well, one day Gatewood and the wife were missing. Under the circumstances Gatewood's friend was well rid of the pair—he should have been grateful, but he wasn't, for his wife took his child, a daughter; and Gatewood a trifle of thirty thousand dollars his friend had entrusted to him."

"There was another silence.

"At a later day I met this man who had been betrayed by his wife and robbed by his friend. He had fallen out of the race—drunk had done for him—there was just one thing he seemed to care about, and that was the fate of his child, but maybe he was only curious there. He wondered if she had lived, and married."

"Once more the judge paused.

"What's all this to me?" asked Pentress.

"You are sure it's nothing to you?"

"I don't know," the judge hoarsely demanded this, Pentress. Gatewood's treachery brought ruin to at least two lives. It caused the woman's father to hide his face from the world; it wasn't enough for him that his friends believed his daughter dead; he knew differently, and the shame of that knowledge ate into his soul. It cost the husband his place in the world, took him the end of his life as a vagabond and a penniless wanderer."

"This is nothing to me," said Pentress.

"Wait!" cried the judge. "About six years ago the woman was seen at her father's home in North Carolina. I reckon Gatewood had cast her off. She didn't go back empty-handed. She had a child—a girl; after a lapse of twenty years she returned to her father with a boy of two or three. There are two questions that must be answered when I find Gatewood: what became of the woman, and what became of the child; are they living or dead; did the daughter grow up and marry and have a son? When I get my answer it will be time enough to think of Gatewood's punishment."

The judge leaned forward across the table, bringing his face close to Pentress's face. "Look at me—do you know me now?"

But Pentress's expression never altered. The judge felt back a step.

"Pentress, I want the boy," he said quietly.

"What boy?"

"My grandson!"

"You are mad! What do I know of him—or you?" Pentress was gaining courage from the sound of his own voice.

"You know who he is and where he is. Your business relations with this man Ware have put you on the track of the Quintard lands in this state. You intend to use the boy to gather them up."

"You're mad!" repeated Pentress.

"Unless you bring him to me inside of twenty-four hours I'll smash you!" roared the judge. "Your name isn't Pentress, it's Gatewood; you've stolen the name of Pentress, just as you have stolen other things. What's come of Turberville's money? Damn your soul! I want my grandson! I'll put you down and leave you stripped to the bone!"

"I'll tell the world the false friend you've been—the thief you are! I'll strip you and turn you out of these doors as naked as when you entered the world!" The judge seemed to tower above Pentress; the man had shot out of his deep debauchment. "Choose! Choose!" he thundered, his shaggy brows bent in a menacing frown.

"I know nothing about the boy," said Pentress slowly.

"By God, you lie!" stormed the judge.

"I know nothing about the boy," said Pentress slowly, and Pentress took a step toward the door.

"Stay where you are!" commanded the judge. "If you attempt to leave this room to call your niggers I'll kill you on its threshold!"

But Yancy and Cavendish had stepped to the door with an intention that was evident, and Pentress's thin face cast itself in haggard lines. He was feeling the judge's terrible capacity, his unexpected ability to deal with a supreme situation. Even Mahaffy gazed at his friend in wonder. He had only seen him spend himself on trifles, with no further object than to toss the glass and contents in Pentress's face.

The next meal or the next drink; he had believed that as he knew him so he would always be, lax and loose of tongue and deed, a noisy tavern hero, but now he saw that he was filling what must have been the measure of his manhood.

"I tell you I had no hand in carrying off the boy," said Pentress with a sardonic smile.

"I look to you to return him. Stir yourself, Gatewood, or by God, I'll hold you for a reckoning with you!"

The sentence remained unaltered, for Pentress felt his overwrought nerves snap, and giving way to a sudden blind fury, struck at the judge.

"We are too old for rough and tumble," said the judge, who had displayed astonishing agility in avoiding the blow. "Furthermore we were once gentlemen. At present I am what I am, while you are a hound and a blackguard. Get out of this room, and come out of my breeding!"

"He poured himself a second glass of liquor from Pentress's decanter. "I wonder if it is possible to insult you," and he passed glass and contents in Pentress's face. The colonel's thin features were convulsed. The judge watched him with a scornful curling of the lips. "I am treating you better than you deserve," he taunted.

"Pentress, standing by the dog's race-track," cried Pentress. The judge bowed with splendid courtesy.

"Nothing could please me half so well," he declared. "He turned to the others. "Gentlemen, this is a private matter. When I have met Colonel Pentress I shall make a public announcement of why this appeared necessary to me; until then I trust this matter will not be given publicity. May I ask your silence?" He bowed again, and abruptly passed from the room.

His three friends followed in his steps, leaving Pentress standing by the table, the ghost of a smile on his thin lips.

As if the very place were evil, the judge hurried down the drive toward the stable, leaving the others to follow him, the ghost of a smile on his thin lips.

"Think of that!" said Yancy, as they were leaving, by the judge's manner as by his words.

"His Uncle Bob shall keep his place in my grandson's life! We'll watch him grow into manhood together!"

The judge was visibly affected. A smile of deep content parted Mr. Yancy's lips as his muscular fingers closed about the judge's hand with crushing force.

"Whop!" cried Cavendish, delighted at the recollection of Yancy's love for the boy, and he gleefully smote the austere Mahaffy on the shoulder. But Mahaffy was dumb in the presence of the deities; he quite lacked an interpreter. The judge looked back at the house.

"Mine?" he muttered. "The clothes he stands in—the food he eats—mine! Mine!"

Play House Proposition Rejected.

By a vote of 85 to 45 the annual school meeting Tuesday night rejected the proposition of the School Board to appropriate $1250 to convert the old school building at Fourth and Howard streets into a recreation building. While pretty much everyone was agreed that the plan was an excellent one in the abstract, there was a decided feeling that the expenditure would not be wise at this time, considering the expenses the taxpayers are already called on to meet.

The discussion was opened when S. W. Wakeman, president of the Board, offered a motion that $7700 be appropriated for the coming year, and E. C. Stoughton proposed an amendment reducing the amount to $6450—cutting off the $1250 for the recreation building.

Mrs. Betty Miller, a member of the Board, made a most able address in favor of the project, developing the thought that the complete educational system looked to the physical and spiritual, as well as the mental growth of the child, and briefly outlining the benefits to the community as well as to the children themselves, that would result from carrying the proposed plan into effect.

Profr. Z. S. Leynel followed with a very brief but enthusiastic outline of the work along these lines being done by the schools in the West, a number of which he recently visited.

Robert Biddle, who has just returned from a Western trip, spoke briefly in favor of the recreation building, referring to other progressive communities where such work is considered a part of the curriculum.

C. A. Wright spoke in opposition on the ground of economy.

W. A. Major suggested that a part of the building could be used as a town hall. Mr. Wakeman replied that the alterations proposed by the Board would not interfere with a part of the building being used for that purpose.

Robert Knight wanted to know what about supervision and instruction and maintenance costs. Mr. Wakeman replied that it had been thought the principal and some of the members of the Board would divide these duties between them and that there would be something left out of the amount asked for alterations toward equipment and maintenance the first year.

When all had been said pro and con a vote by acclamation was taken, and it was not satisfactory and a rising vote was called for. When taken and counted it was found the amendment carried by 85 to 45. A resolution was then unanimously passed making the appropriation $6450.

Charles G. Davis, a member of the Board, said he thought the property might be disposed of if the ground could be sold too, as he understood there was an organization in Riverton ready to make an offer if the ground could be purchased.

By request of Edward J. Pancoast, who was unable to be present at the meeting, E. C. Stoughton offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Board of Education of Borough of Riverton be and are hereby directed to call a special meeting of the inhabitants of said school district within the next thirty days.

Resolved that call and notice shall be to authorize the said Board of Education to sell the old school building at Fourth and Howard streets—buildings and lot, at public sale during the month of July, 1912.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mayor E. H. Flagg was chairman of the meeting, Robert Knight secretary and William B. Lynch and John G. Seckel tellers.

School Notes.

Miss Elsie Eval visited schools at Orange and East Orange this week.

The following students have been received: The Palmyra University, the Chicago School of Physical Education, Penn College, Berkeley School, Drexel Institute of Art, Science and Industry, Bulletin of Oberlin, College of Views and Campus Buildings, American School Board Journal.

The pupils of the eighth grade have been doing some practical work in composition, by answering business letters which are sent to the school.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Reese are spending a week at the Runnymede, Atlantic City. Mrs. Edwin Evans, entertained Miss Grimmer, of Philadelphia, on Wednesday.

Percy B. Lovell, of the Moorestown Chronicle, was a visitor at THE NEW ERA office on Monday.

Miss Mary Bacon and Mrs. William Rourke, of Camden, spent Tuesday with Mrs. Albert Faunce.

Mrs. S. J. Coddington entertained Mrs. Frank Bender and Miss Elsie Lee, of Camden, on Sunday.

Frank Flagg, of Battleboro, Vt., was the guest of his cousin, Mayor E. H. Flagg, Jr., on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville Marple, of Hightstown, spent Sunday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Perkins.

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell Ford, of Haddonfield, spent the early part of the week with Dr. and Mrs. C. S. Mills.

The annual convention of the Grand Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, will be held in Trenton, on April 17 and 18.

Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Marcy, Jr., entertained Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Candee, of Wilmington, Del., on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The ladies auxiliary of the Riverton A. M. E. Church will give a banquet at the home of Mrs. Alice Taylor, Saturday night, March 23.

John Hoyle, of Seventh street, has moved to the Daniels property on Thomas avenue. John B. Watson had charge of the work.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Woolston have purchased one of the new Houghtaling properties on Linden avenue, and took possession this week.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is putting in underground conduits all its telegraph and telephone wires. The work in Riverton is now under way.

For the convenience of its patrons the Pennsylvania Railroad Company installed a telephone at the Riverton freight station this week.

Miss Amanda D. Faunce is a graduate of the Pennsylvania Hospital this year. Miss Faunce will devote her talents to charity nursing in Philadelphia.

The dancing class will meet next Thursday evening in the auditorium of the school, and on April 11th the last meeting of the season will be held, making fifteen in all.

It is understood that Court Riverton, No. 99, Foresters of America, is considering the purchase of the old school buildings for lodge purposes, if the ground can be secured, too.

Commander Appelget announces that the forty-fifth annual encampment of the Department of New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic, will be held at Asbury Park, June 13 and 14.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Faunce announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Annie May, to Robert Bacon, of Camden, on Saturday last. Mr. and Mrs. Bacon will reside in Camden.

Junior Deputy Supreme Earl Cedar E. H. Flagg, Jr., visited Roundwine Forest No. 20, at Wilmington, Del., on Monday night, and Penn Forest No. 21, at Chester, Wednesday evening, in the interests of the order.

The gate tender's house at the Main street railroad crossing is being elevated to give an unobstructed view of the tracks eastward from the ticket office. He will be able to operate the gates from inside the tower.

The annual meeting of the Mothers' Circle was held Thursday afternoon, and the officers elected for another year. The State meeting of the Mothers' Congress will meet at Riverton in the fall, and ways and means of entertaining them were discussed.

The proposition to force the sale of the old school property in July will bear a little investigation before taking action. The cost of keeping it is small and a forced sale means heavy sacrifice. Reactions toward equipment and maintenance the first year.

The Music Section of the Porch Club held their regular meeting on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. C. L. Candee and Mrs. Huxley, of Wilmington, and Mrs. C. S. Mills, of Riverton, with Mrs. F. A. Bell, as accompanist entertained the club in a very delightful manner. Rev. and Mrs. Candee were warmly welcomed by their many friends.

A sacred concert was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Ridley on Monday evening. Mrs. C. S. Mills, Mrs. W. W. Collin, Mrs. H. M. Morris and Raymond Hawley were the soloists, with Mrs. Frank A. Bell as accompanist. Mrs. T. L. Brehm and G. Lincoln Ridley rendered instrumental selections. "God So Loved the World," was given in a beautiful manner by a chorus.

John S. Bioren will retire from the banking firm of Bioren Co., of which he is senior partner, at the end of the present month. His connection with the firm began in 1879, thus extending over a period of nearly thirty-three years. The House was founded in 1865 by Messrs. John and Charles H. Bioren. Mr. Bioren desires more leisure time to devote to personal interests, but will remain interested in many of the corporations with which he is at present connected.

The Board of Education of Chesterfield township has declared war on County Superintendent Herman A. Steers, and has adopted resolutions asking the State Board of Education not to reappoint him. The cause of the trouble is not stated but it appears hardly likely that the other township will join Chesterfield in its war on the County Superintendent, whose services seem to be generally regarded as efficient and satisfactory.—New Jersey Mirror.

Portrait Ring is Novelty. One of the novelties of the season is the portrait ring. To all appearance the circlet is an ordinary silver ring, with a head massively set. At one side, however, is a spring, which, when pressed, causes the top of the seal to leap back, the silver in reality forming a miniature box. A tiny portrait on copper in colors or monochrome is then disclosed to view.

New Jersey Conference of Charities and Corrections.

At Orange, on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, March 24th, 25th and 26th, there will be held the 11th Annual New Jersey Conference of Charities and Corrections. The meetings will be held at the Woman's Club, Prospect and William streets, Brick Church station, East Orange, the sessions being on Sunday at 8 p. m., on Monday at 9.30 a. m., 2 and 8 p. m., and on Tuesday 9.30 and 2 p. m.

For the general topic has been chosen, "The Relation of our Schools to Pauperism, Delinquency and Crime," a subject of deep interest, which will be discussed from its different view points by those eminently fitted to clearly set forth the features of the program. Following the address of the president, Prof. Royal Meeker, at the Sunday afternoon meeting, Miss Virginia C. Gildersleeve, Dean of Barnard College, Columbia University, will be heard.

Monday morning, with Dr. C. S. Chapin, New Jersey State Normal School, as chairman, addresses will be made by Dr. James P. Hancy, Department of Education, New York. Railroad Accidents. Trespassing on Pennsylvania Railroad system's property in violation of the law has caused the deaths of 8,523 people since January 1st, 1900. In the same time 2,285 people have been injured as a result of trespassing. These facts are brought out in a report issued on Monday by the Pennsylvania.

Discussing the dangers of trespassing, an officer of the Pennsylvania said: "The railroads may be penalized by payments in money, but the individual's or citizen's penalty is the supreme one of life, which, manifestly, is the highest duty of the State to protect by such legislation as will tend to prevent trespassing on railroads. The renewed and diligent efforts the Pennsylvania Railroad is making to stop trespassing will be measurably influential, the management believes, in arousing the public to a realization that in railroad accidents it is the individual who loses his life, than which there can be no greater sacrifice."

To the Veterans of the Civil War. The Commission appointed by His Excellency, Governor Woodrow Wilson, for the purpose of causing the removal of the remains of the late Major General Philip Kearny to Arlington Cemetery, take this method to notify all Veterans of the Civil War, who may desire to accompany the Commission, that they may do so by making application to Charles F. Hopkins, Bonton, N. J.

Application must be made on or before April first, accompanied by the sum of $5.00, either in cash, check or post office order, or it cannot be considered.

This amount covers the cost of transportation from Jersey City to Washington, D. C., and return and includes luncheon each way.

The train will leave Pennsylvania Railroad station, Jersey City, on Friday, April 12th at 8.30 a. m. and will stop to take on passengers at Newark, Trenton and West Philadelphia. All veterans receiving this notice are requested to give it publicity through the local newspapers in their vicinity.

By order of the Commission, CHARLES F. HOPKINS, President.

Presbyterian Church Notes. Rev. L. L. Overman, of Philadelphia, will preach next Sunday.

Morning service at 10.45. Sunday School at 2.30 p. m. Evening service at 8 o'clock.

Annual meeting of the Sunday School Association on Tuesday evening in the Chapel.

Prayer meeting on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

MRS. ALFRED SMITH

Charming Opera Success.

Viennese music that pulsates with seductive melodies, stirring marches, dainty duets, trios and concerted numbers, gracefully embellishing the charming story of a gallant Duke and his little rose girl sweetheart, has swung the new operetta "The Rose Maid" into immediate favor since its first performance in this country a month ago. The Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, is to have the fascinating opera for only two weeks beginning next Monday, March 25th, after which this new Verba and Luescher success opens in New York. Music lovers declare "The Rose Maid" to be a better production in every way than the artistic young firm of managers had in "The Sparrows."

Advance interest in "The Rose Maid" is almost unprecedented. Mail orders began pouring in as soon as the opera was announced. Manager Zimmerman of the Chestnut Street Opera House believes the new piece might profitably remain in Philadelphia the rest of the season, the management had not previously arranged for its presentation in New York.

"The Rose Maid" has introduced a new composer, Herr Bruno Granich-Staedten, who came from Vienna to direct the rehearsals and whose enormous success has resulted in a contract for him to write the next starring opera for Christie MacDonnell. No little of "The Rose Maid" success is said to be due to the superb accompaniment furnished by Adrienne Augarde was imported for the title role, while Edith Decker, whose triumph in "Havana" is well remembered, the prima donna. Juliette Dika has surpassed herself in a French part and the half dozen comedy roles are well taken care of by R. E. Graham of "Merry Widow" fame, Edward Gallagher and Al Shean, two of the funniest men who ever appeared in vaudeville. Arthur Lacey, Thomas Whiffen and Eugene Redding. For the part of the dashing hero, Verba and Luescher have secured Arthur Royd from the London "Spring Maid" company and J. Humbird Duffey, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera House forces.

"The Rose Maid" requires an orchestra of forty musicians under Max Bondy, formerly conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City.

Matinee performances will be given on Wednesdays and Saturdays during the fortnight engagement of "The Rose Maid" at the Chestnut Opera House.

"The Sweetest Girl in Paris." Trixie Friganza in "The Sweetest Girl in Paris," now in for a run at the Walnut Street Theatre, has made the biggest hit of the season in Philadelphia. She is surrounded by an exceptionally good company of fan-makers, who have done much toward furthering the unprecedented popularity of this show, although "The Sweetest Girl in Paris" represents the finest work of three noted writers.

The book is by Addison Burkhardt, who has nearly a dozen musical comedy hits to his credit. The lyrics are the work of Collins Davis, who turned the "Three Twins" into a distinctive success, while the music was composed by Joseph Howard, who has written more popular music than any man in America, and in this instance has surpassed his own most widely known success "The Time, The Place and The Girl," which had a long run at the Walnut a couple of seasons ago.

"The Sweetest Girl in Paris" is brimful of song hits that evolve naturally out of the humorous complications and scenes of the play. Among the most popular of these are "Don't Forget the Number," which is one of the most popular songs Miss Friganza has ever had; "That's the Way That Imitations Look to me," "Gee, I'm Glad I'm Fat," "I Love All The Girls from A to Z," "There's Nothing Too Good For You," "I Want a Man," an exceedingly comic song rendered by Cathryn Rose Palmer, whose eccentric comedy dancing has made a tremendous hit; "Weather Man," "Mary's Lamb," "Boys, Boys, Boys," and "The Occasional Bombast," during which examples of Russian and classic styles are introduced, and a beautiful intermezzo, which opens the second act, entitled "The Sweetest Girl in Paris." These numbers are all staged with the utmost lavishness and uniqueness, and typify the most advanced

AND MY WIFE, ROSIE," TOO

Bridgemoor Who Had Forgotten to Register His New Better Half Quickly Makes Amends.

In spick and span raiment, carrying a new suit case and a timid expression, they entered the Hotel Ragsanagat and inquired the way unhesitatingly to the desk, says the Providence Journal.

Spying a kernel of rice on the youth's hat brim, the clerk smiled covertly, whirled the register with an encouraging flourish and placed the linked pen in the nervous hand.

"John B. New Bedford, Mass.," wrote the youth, pushed back his hat, upset the kernel of rice and wiped his bearded brow.

"But, er—the lady?" inquired the clerk soothingly.

"She's my wife," quoth the youth, straightening up, brilliant.

"She ought to be registered," advised the clerk thoughtfully.

"Ain't you put me down?" the lady murmured, looking over the youth's shoulder.

"O, sure, I—I forgot. Gimme the pen," said the youth, quickly.

Whereupon he smiled and wrote: "And my wife, Rosie."

Motorist at its Best. Few motorists know of motoring in all its fullness. They drive along country roads for a hundred miles or so, through towns so closely set that they virtually run through one long village, and they think they have motored.

They cross the ocean and enjoy the perfect roads of France and Switzerland, and imagine they have experienced all there is in life in the motor car; but no one has ever been brought to a full realization of what motoring really is, or what the wonderful modern machine of man's creative genius is really capable of doing until they have sat in a racing car side by side with an expert driver and tasted the sport as it is under such conditions.

Lord Byron once wrote: "What a delightful thing is a turnip race, such a means of speeding the earth as scarce the eagle in the broad air can accomplish." He certainly spoke in prophecy of the motor car, and especially of the racing machine, which defies distance and shrinks space into the most tiny proportions.—The Columbian.

State Will Not Pay Tips. The anti-tipping campaign started by commercial travelers has enlisted a powerful recruit in W. E. Davis, state auditor of Kansas. Mr. Davis has decreed that Kansas state officials, when traveling on the state's business, are not entitled to charge the public treasury for tips paid. It cost Kansas just $3,000 in 1911 for tips distributed by state officials, and Mr. Davis has issued a set of rules for the benefit of employees who travel for the state, in which he says: "Tips or gratuities are recognitions of special service, not an actual and necessary expense for the service itself and will not be allowed." The controller of the treasury of the United States, on the other hand, has ruled that tips are a necessary incident of travel and are properly collectible from the public funds.

Powers Wasted. As a rule, men habitually use only a small part of the powers which they actually possess, and which they might use under appropriate conditions.—William James Explanation of Sun's Heat. The reason why the sun retains its heat despite the large amount it gives out is explained by the fact that heat is generated by the fall of particles toward its center.

Foolish. The man who goes into court merely to obtain satisfaction is about as foolish as the one who exhausts himself in trying to go through the world on a bluff.

Thrifty Spider. Spiders are said to "work over" their old silk, and thus save themselves the trouble of extracting and compounding it afresh.

Industrious Jackdaws. Sixty-seven skeletons of these birds have been discovered on top of the tower of St. Michael's church, Exeter, England. They had been carried there by jackdaws for nest building.

Collectors are out soliciting funds for the Riverton Athletic base ball team. Don't get a sudden contraction of the pocket book when they call on you. Riverton can and should be represented by a good team, but it will take a little money to run it.

There is a rapidly growing sentiment against undue haste in disposing of the old school property. The school board has acted wisely in refusing ridiculously low offers for the buildings, and it is a question whether the ground ought to be sold, in view of the possible need for another school house in the not distant future.

The New Jersey Conference of Charities and Corrections, which met at Orange on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, was very largely attended by delegates from all parts of the State. The conference was entertained by the Women's Club of Orange in their Club house. Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Marcy were the only representatives from Riverton.

The firm having the contract from the Government to dig a 12-foot channel in the Delaware from Otis street wharf, Philadelphia, have progressed with the work as far as Riverton. At this point they are digging up a superior grade of gravel for which they find ready sale in the city. This improvement will be a great aid to navigation, particularly between Bordentown and Trenton, where the shoals have been serious obstacles.

Last Sunday afternoon George Miller, about 18 years of age, employed by Joseph T. Evans, on the pike, disappeared after being employed there about two months. At the same time a new suit of clothing, among which was a new suit that Mr. Evans had never worn, a watch, a clock, some money and other valuables departed from the Evans household. At the time of Miller's departure Arthur Smith, aged 17, of Palmyra, also left town. Miller was employed by J. Frank Clark last summer. He was known in Vineland as George W. Southwick.

Keith's Theatre.
A show that no vaudeville can afford to miss—and that means practically everybody in Philadelphia and vicinity—is the offering at Keith's Theatre for the opening week in April. It is exceptional from many standpoints, with much to interest the music-lover, the wits and the children.

Jesse L. Lusky has achieved national fame through the brilliancy of his vaudeville productions, his latest and greatest creation being "The Antique Girl," a musical comedy with many variations, put forth in Mr. Lusky's usually sumptuous style, with a cast of some twenty stars and choruses, headed by well-known artists, such as Fletcher Norton, Doris Wilson, Charles Pursey and Maud Earl. The book and lyrics are by William LeBaron and Cecil De Mille, with the music by Robert Hood Bowers. There are seven brilliant musical numbers, all of them original, and offered under the leadership of Mr. Charles Burton.

Another first appearance is the presentation of the late Sir W. S. Gilbert's pretty playlet of English life called "Sweethearts" as interpreted by Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Connelly. The famous collaborator with Sir Arthur Sullivan in "Pinafore," "The Mikado" and other international successes, never wrote anything more charming and convincing for sentiment and naturalness than this little drama of heart interest, which ran for many consecutive months in the theatres of London and other important cities.

Mac Melville and Robert Higgins have been seen in this theatre before in their comedy sketch "Just a Little Fun," and more than made good. On this occasion they present their new sketch which they call "Just Married," and which is even more amusing than their former vehicle with which everybody was so well pleased. These lively people will surely be a hit.

Right Giving.
Our giving must be such as truly to enrich both giver and receiver. But we can all judge these things fairly well for ourselves; if we make mistakes sometimes those mistakes will be forgiven to us where the motive was right.

Pleasure in Life.
The life of a good man is not at all in want of pleasure, as a certain appendage, but contains pleasure in itself; for he is not a good man who does not rejoice in beautiful actions and actions according to virtue will be in themselves delectable.—Aristotle.

Strange Sight.
"When we were on Lake Michigan last summer," says Mrs. Maxigram, "we saw a beautiful sight one afternoon. We were away out in the middle of the lake, and we steamed past a schooner with a woman on it full of brick and lumber."—Judge.

One Thing Worth Having.
In this world the one thing worth having is the opportunity, coupled with the capacity, to do well and worthily a piece of work the doing of which is of vital consequence to the welfare of mankind.—Theodore Roosevelt.

The Dimdumeries

"Whachu doin'?" queried the small boy as he peered cautiously out of the back door into the alley where the apartment house janitor was superintending the cremation of a rubbish heap. The small boy's nostrils twitched appreciatively as he sniffed the bonfire.

Mike, the janitor, looked all around and then cautiously said: "Hist!" and crooked a finger.

"What is?" gasped the small boy as he tiptoed hurriedly out and joined Mike on the windward side of the blaze.

"It's a celebration, of mine," the janitor explained. "Every wance in a while I go through the rites."

"What rites?" in an awed whisper. The book and lyrics are by William LeBaron and Cecil De Mille, with the music by Robert Hood Bowers. There are seven brilliant musical numbers, all of them original, and offered under the leadership of Mr. Charles Burton.

"That's what I call the Dimdumeries," Mike replied. "I came to this country, didn't you? Well, I was!"

The small boy dragged up a box that had escaped the blaze and sat down on it very close to Mike. "Tell me," he begged.

"The Dimdumeries," explained the janitor, "is a flourishing society in the old country that has communication with ghosts and 'fairies'—an 'aperis' in general. Whenever a Dimdumery wants to talk to a fairy all he has to do is build a magic bonfire on a spot hit by the light of the full moon for five minutes on a Thursday night. That's very important, picking out the right spot. And lay the first sticks pointing toward the north!"

The small boy peered at the base of the bonfire, but the janitor sighed. "They ain't any spots that the light of the moon hits on a Thursday night in this neighborhood," he mourned. "That is, except some that is occupied by buildings and otherwise engaged. But I say the magic words over my fires and pretend it's a glad I'm in and that there are fairies peeking out."

"Did you—did you ever truly see a fairy, Mike?" the small boy almost whispered.

The janitor laughed condescendingly. "Did I ever see a fairy, now?" he repeated, scornfully. "Well, listen to that! Ain't I telling you how I was the chief of the Dimdumeries and what for would they be making me chief if I couldn't see more fairies than any other man in the country?"

There was one fairy who—look out, you'll be in the fire, now!—who used to pop up just as sociable an 'smoke a pipe with me every time I lit a fire for him! Wance he said: 'Mike, I say you—you're a fine lad, an' you may have two wishes—anything you ask shall be granted!'"

"I know what I'd have asked for!" breathed the small boy. "An airship an'—"

"Alrhhp!" Mike repeated in disgust. "That shows your headless disposition! A real sensible person would have asked for a wagon load of money, wouldn't he? An' then he could get a fleet of balloons an' everything."

"Oh, of course!" agreed the small boy, much embarrassed. "Of course he would! But what did you do with the well-wish, to do with it? I was as rich as that I couldn't work."

The janitor coughed and was very busy stirring the fire. "What did I do with it?" he repeated, scowling

Little Dorothy Coleman presented Mrs. Sargent with a lovely cluster of roses.

On Wednesday evening the Methodist Sunday School held an entertainment to celebrate the arrival of the steamships Lusitania and Mauretania at Palestine. This was the completion of a contest which was started in October for the purpose of securing new members encouraging regular and prompt attendance at Sunday School, church attendance, and several other important things. An interesting program was rendered and stereoscopic pictures of Palestine shown. A return trip is being arranged for.

Everything is moving smoothly toward the most successful presentation of minstrel specialties yet made by The Field Club. There are many new features, and several new faces will be seen in the front row. In the first half the end men will be George Dargis and Clifford Bell, while Perry C. Clark will make his debut as interloper. In the second half M. B. Faunce will be found at his old post, with Albert Hardy as new end man, and Benjamin Hardy interloper. Specialties by Schroeffer and Beahm. William Miller, the popular monologist, will be there. The Mandolin Club which was organized in October has been making wonderful progress, and will take part. Tickets are on sale at Schroeffer's, Palmyra, or may be had by telephoning to The Field Club rooms, 187A.

Howard Stackhouse has been entertaining his cousin from New York the past two weeks.

A rude screen and choir stalls have been presented to Christ Church, Palmyra, by St. Barnabas Church, Burlington. "The Storm," a concert in which 600 children took part at the Temple, Philadelphia, was largely attended from Palmyra last night. Mrs. Charles Williams took her class from the Baptist Sunday School.

"Fondler's Night" was celebrated by the P. O. S. of A. last Monday. Camp No. 23 entertained two camps from Philadelphia which brought large delegations with them. Addresses were made by several of the past-presidents and a number of the charter members gave short sketches of the progress of the Camp. A banquet was served and the guests were entertained by Philadelphia talent.

Field Club Notes.

The Field Club squad of ball tossers turned out to play several games. The snappy practice despite the cold wind, and Manager Griffenburgh is some pleased with the way the candidates are showing up.

After the usual practice Manager Griffenburgh picked two teams and had a fine chance to see the calibre of the new men. There were no curves used as Griffenburgh wants to be sure and have his pitchers in shape. The tossing was done by Bauder and Holt, both porters, and Ollie Dargis, Russell Gibbons and Bodine. The receiving was done by Joe Keating, R. Hubbs, Al. Koppelhofer and George Dargis. Griffenburgh wants to pick another catcher and he is yet undecided which is the best as two of them look very good. He is also shy two infielders, third base and second base, and as there are two good men out for these positions it looks as if he will have an infield hard to beat.

Little Charlie Flynn was on third and plays a very strong game and it looks to me as if he is going to have the first call, the only fault that can be found with him is his stature; he is very small and would always get the worst of it in a collision, but he has the goods both in fielding and batting. In Al. Hardy's absence Bauder played catcher, but he is as yet an unknown quantity as he had a sore arm and could not do himself justice. Of the new outfield material Boehme is by far the best, with Hinkle a close second. Boehme is fast, can throw a streak and can bat with the best of them. He has not decided whether or not he is coming out, but let's hope he does as he would make a fine helper to Kemmerle, Keil and Keyes.

This Saturday a game will be played with the regulars against the yanigans. The regulars will use the cub battery and the yanigans the regulars. This will even it up somewhat and a good game should follow, so if you have nothing on come down and look them over.

The other stout member of the party, Harry Acker, who is manager of the second team said last night that he was sure to have some team this year as there was too much good material out for the first team and Griffenburgh was sure to cut his squad in the near future. I look for a cut after Saturday's game, so boys play your best and you might be one of the regulars this year.

The Field Club boys were sorry to hear that Riverton had dropped out of the League as the patrons are sure to miss the holiday games, but with two teams such as Florence and Riverside on tap, a good game can be assured of.

James T. Weart has recently been elected to the Athletic committee by being appointed manager of the basketball team. This gives the committee a fine set of men and everyone is sure to work for the interest of the Club.

Delaware River League.

The Delaware River League meetings are always sure to hand you a surprise. At last week's meeting Riverton and Delair resigned, the latter was looked for but Riverton surprised everyone by sending in their resignation and Thursday evening when the League met again at The Field Club rooms, not to be outdone in the line of surprises, last another one of its charter members by the resignation of the Riverside A. A. The resignation originates from the time the League accepted the Tauld Mill team from the same town, the original Riverside team seriously objected at the time but no one ever entertained it thought that it would result in the League losing the champions of last year.

Before Riverside handed in their resignation they proposed the forming of two four-team Leagues, but this was voted on and it was decided that a six-team circuit would be more interesting and more profitable and could not see Riverside's idea. Riverside then proposed dropping the Tauld team but this would not have been fair to the said team and Riverside made a big mistake in asking it. A recess was then taken to give Riverside a chance to talk matters over and on reconvening the Riverside team handed in their resignation which was accepted with regrets.

A committee was then appointed to try and get a team in Riverside's place to report at a special meeting Monday, April 1st, at The Field Club rooms. A schedule will also be adopted at this meeting.

Mr. Tucker, of Delair, who was elected president at the last meeting, could not accept on account of business but wishes the League every success. Vice-President Absolon was in his chair.

The second Friday of the month was decided on for the regular meeting.

The initiatory degree will be conferred on five candidates next Friday evening.

A special meeting of the Grand Lodge was held in Camden last evening. D. D. G. M. C. A. MacCrossan and other Past Grandes represented Cinnaminson Lodge.

Water in the Desert.

Yapp, the English naturalist, who has explored the mountain ranges of the Malay peninsula, reports the fact, not generally known, that in several species of bamboo the hollow interior nodes—the parts of the stems between the joints—are stored with large quantities of naturally filtered water. The knowledge of this fact might be of great service in an emergency.

Chateau of Vincennes.

At Vincennes, famous in the annals of aviation, is noted also for its medieval chateau with castle and donjon. The walls of the rooms of the keep have been encumbered and hidden with old harnesses and armor. The stairway, trodden by so many kings, princes and cardinals, has been restored; and the prison and council chamber.—Traveler's Gazette.

Down Fine.

"Now, Willie," said the superintendent's little boy, addressing the blacksmith's little boy, who had to come over for a frolle, "we'll play 'Sabbath school.' You give me a nickel every Sunday for six months and then at Christmas I'll give you a 10-cent box of candy."—Woman's Home Companion.

The Idea.

A certain woman assured her husband she never told him a lie, and never would. He told her he did not doubt it, but would hereafter cut a notch in the piano when he knew she deceived him. "No, you won't!" she screamed. "I'm not going to have my piano ruined!"

Margie's Idea.

"Papa was very polite at dinner," observed small Margie. "In serving the ladies he said 'dressing,' because they like to dress, but in serving the gentlemen he called it 'stuffing,' because they always want so much to eat."

A Frightful Thought.

Mrs. Walback (on first ocean voyage)—John, I just heard a man say that if this boat was put up on end it would be higher than the Washington monument. If they're going to do anything like that we better get right off!—Puck.

Hang to It.

All men have wandering impulses, fits and starts of generosity. But when you have resolved to be great, abide by yourself and do not weakly try to reconcile yourself with the world.—Emerson.

Always a Chance.

There is something in every season of the year for the average fool. In the summer he can rock the boat, in the fall go gunning, in the winter skate on thin ice, and in the spring fall in love.

Word From Brother Dickey.

"It can't just squeeze through the Glory Gate up yonder if he's satisfied. I don't want 'em to question me, for too close inquiries might send me for yuther way."—Atlanta Constitution.

Home of the Ruby.

Ruby mines of the Mogok valley are known to have been worked since the year 1600. Just how old these mines are nobody knows, for they have produced practically all the rubies of ancient and modern times.

HIS RESIGNATION STILL AWAITED

Dr. Fitzherbert Fails to Quit the Senate.

SILZER CONTEST IS SETTLED.

Senator Who Wanted to Be Secretary of State Accepts Pressures of Middlesex County, Leaving State Office to David S. Crater, Governor's Choice.

(Special Correspondence.)

Trenton, N. J., March 28.—Senator Richard Fitzherbert of Morris county, whom the Republican majority has voted guilty of conduct unbecoming a member of the legislature, has today notified his colleagues that he will resign his seat.

He made his appearance in the senate chamber yesterday afternoon just before the time announced for the convening of the session, and told a number of the newspaper men that he intended to take his seat.

He saluted some of his Democratic colleagues as they passed when he was talking to the newspaper men, and they responded, but in a perfunctory way.

As soon as the Republicans saw him hurriedly conferred with him, and it was evident that they were perturbed. They did not want Mr. Fitzherbert to take his seat, but President Price was not expected to arrive for an hour later, and they lacked the sufficient number of votes to take decisive action.

Mr. Fitzherbert then moved to the desk and rapped the gavel, and Senator Leavitt immediately moved that a recess be taken.

Senator Fitzherbert then had a talk with Senators Fielder and Johnson, and they both advised him not to cause any trouble so late in the session. They told him to go home.

The Republicans in the meantime were active and got together in the president's room. They determined to take up the report that the Morris senator had attempted to get a retainer from last year's legislature. Other bills passed permit voters absent from the state or ill to register by affidavit, answering the questions as they would at the polls; provide that personal registration in not to be required in municipalities of less than 10,000 population; changing the primary election day for delegates to the national convention from May 28 to May 11.

Senator Fitzherbert then had a talk with the governor, and he was assured that the governor would not object to his resignation.

Following the conference the governor received the newspaper men and was asked for a statement. He replied that it would be hardly fair for him to discuss the question then, as he desired to be entirely considerate of Senator Fitzherbert. He asserted, however, that he expected to hear from the senator within a few hours, and if he did not so he would have a statement to make. The interpretation given to this declaration was that the governor looked for Mr. Fitzherbert's resignation and that if he did not receive it he would give his view of the entire proceeding.

Later the governor stated that while no message had been sent him by Mr. Fitzherbert, he believed that he would be called to the governor's office to take his seat.

Silzer Takes Prosecutorial. Any strained relations among the senators and Governor Wilson were averted when Senator Silzer accepted the office of prosecutor of Middlesex County. The governor's appointment of the office of secretary of state and had practically the unanimous support of the senate. David S. Crater of Monmouth received that state office, and Senator Silzer held out for a time, but notified the senate that he would accept. His name was immediately sent to the senate for confirmation.

The appointment is for five years at a salary of $5,000. Senator Silzer had been state for a number of years, but if a new member were added to the court, but the "Republican board of guardians" has killed this bill, and there is no chance for its adoption.

Governor Wilson has vetoed the Gaunt bill, senate 177, extending the limits of public utility franchises to fifty years, for the reason that indeterminate franchises form the only proper system. As the law is, the franchises are limited to twenty years, unless by referendum the voters decide that they may cover forty years. South Jersey counties were interested in the bill because they believed that it would mean the extension of trolley lines in their part of the state. It was also thought it would make surer the construction of a tunnel between Philadelphia and Camden. The governor admitted that South Jersey is hampered in its means of communication, but thought that the indeterminate franchise should be adopted.

One of Governor Wilson's visitors this week was Obadiah Gardner, United States senator from Maine. He told the executive that the Democrats of Maine were entirely in favor of him to head the presidential ticket. Mr. Gardner is the first Democrat to be elected as senator from Maine for a number of years.

By the vote of 18 to 32 the house has given its disapproval of women suffrage. The committee on judiciary reported adversely the resolution for an amendment to the constitution for suffrage and the report was supported by the above vote. Although the women have disapproved of suffrage the women believe they have made greater progress in New Jersey in one year than has ever been made in any state of the country. They assert that they will take up the fight again next year.

Women are not barred from core making positions in foundries, as the house has defeated Ford's bill to prevent them from following this work. The house believed that worthy women would be thrown out of work by such a law. Another of Ford's bills to meet with disapproval was that to permit limited boxing bouts. The house bill by Murray to require women to wear guards on long batpins or other adornments with sharp points that are liable to injure others was also defeated.

$25,000 For Ship Canal.

Advanced steps toward a ship canal across the state will be permitted under a bill signed by the governor this week. The measure appropriates $25,000 for the permanent marking of the route for the canal between Bordentown and the Raritan river near South Amboy. This canal is to be one of the main links of inland waterways between Massachusetts and Florida. At the last session of the legislature an appropriation of $500,000 was granted to purchase the right of way for the canal as soon as the federal government moved to take up the work. Other bills signed by the governor provide a pension of $1,200 a year to the widow of former Governor Weerts, appropriate $10,000 for an exhibit of New Jersey products at the land irrigation exposition in New York next November, prohibit the use of mulder "cut out" on automobiles and appropriate $500,000 for the instruction of blind or deaf pupils.

Members of the house committee on education and the state board of education have reached a compromise in the controversy over the repeal of the law passed last year abolishing promotion on an merit in the public schools. The compromise permits the school districts to establish their own rules for promotion, but that the state board may give examinations to test the efficiency of the schools. The test is not to have any relation to the pupils' promotion.

Trackless Trolley Bill Opposed.

Opposition to Senator Smith's bill for trackless trolleys was founded on the belief that such a line would do further injury to roads and that there was no need for such a law. The senator maintained that the law was wanted for communities where trolley roads do not pay.

Sherriff in counties of the second, third and fourth class are not to get automobiles at the expense of the counties, as the house has defeated Assemblyman Godfrey's bill permitting them to buy the machines.

Volunteer workers may transport voters to and from the polls under an amendment of the Geran law, which has passed both houses. Opponents of the bill declared that it was an attack on last year's legislation. Other bills passed permit voters absent from the state or ill to register by affidavit, answering the questions as they would at the polls; provide that personal registration in not to be required in municipalities of less than 10,000 population; changing the primary election day for delegates to the national convention from May 28 to May 11.
