GIVE THE SOLDIER A SQUARE DEAL

Men, Women and Children of Burlington County:

The young men of your county have flocked to the colors with a valor and patriotism that is too inspiring for mere verbal praise.

They have offered their best—their very lives to the flag and country they love.

And when they go away, you will cheer—if the lump keeps out of your throat long enough.

But unless the American Red Cross follows these boys across the seas, their slightest illness or wound may mean months of suffering or even death.

And unless you give to the limit of your financial ability to help the Red Cross raise $100,000,000 this week for its war work, all your cheers and huzzas will be as "tinkling cymbals and sounding brass."

You can't look your soldier friend in the eye as you clasp his hand in farewell and sincerely wish him "luck and Godspeed."

Unless you have dipped deep down into your pocketbook and given until you felt the pinch, to aid the Red Cross in taking care of his health while he is away fighting for you!

If a solicitor of the Burlington County Red Cross Finance Committee falls to offer you an opportunity to contribute this week, send your subscription direct to the committee, care of Walter E. Robb, chairman, Burlington City Loan & Trust Company, Burlington, N. J.

All bona fide solicitors will present official receipts for funds collected. Pay money to no others.

GUARDS TAKEN FROM WATER WORKS

Decision of Palmyra Safety Committee

At a special meeting of the Palmyra Safety Committee held in the high school auditorium on Tuesday evening, after much discussion and careful consideration on the part of all members, the guarding of the water works was decided upon as follows: The water works will be guarded from the stand pipes.

This final decision was not made until the matter had been discussed from various angles.

A suggestion was made that Adjutant General Barber be conferred with regarding the furnishing of National Guards for this purpose.

Mr. Jacob Warner queried the practicability of a direct supply from the water works, should there be a destruction of the tanks which was answered by Mr. Frank Howell, who made it clear that the pressure needed can be only obtained by the gravity from the tanks.

The effect on the insurance on the properties was also considered, being brought to attention by Mr. Howell. No action could be taken by the insurance companies until the water supply shall have been cut off and then due notice would be given.

After taking up the different phases of the question, a motion to discontinue the guarding of the water works was made by Mr. Christian Jensen and seconded by Mr. Charles Bauder. At this point the suggestion by a number of the members that the committee assume the duty of guarding both tanks and works was voted down.

However, it was thoroughly understood that while this guard duty was abandoned, it did not relinquish the members of their obligations as special officers.

The meeting then adjourned.

THOMAS PARRY

A quiet wedding was solemnized on Friday evening last at 6 o'clock at the parsonage of the Calvary Presbyterian Church by the Rev. N. Stahl, when Miss Sarah Parry, daughter of Mrs. John Parry, of Riverton, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert Parker Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Thomas, of Linden avenue.

The wedding was attended by immediate relatives only, the bride being given in marriage by her mother and accompanied by her sister Mrs. Lindsey Robbins, as a matron of honor.

Mr. D. L. Vaughn, brother-in-law of the groom, acted as best man. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal pair left for their wedding trip to Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Returning on Monday the Palmyra Garage, of which Mr. Thomas is proprietor, was gaily adorned from top to bottom by his vast number of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas will reside at the Parry homestead in Westfield.

THE SIGN OF THE RED CROSS, Y. M. C. A. BUILDING, BROAD AND GARFIELD AVENUE

A Womanly Woman A Great Gift to A Great Nation

(By M. W. Wishan)

Clara Barton was born on Christmas Day, 1821, at New Oxford, Massachusetts, of that sturdy, New England parentage which has developed so much honor to our nation. Those who remember her familiar, erect figure saw in it the type of American womanhood. Her deep sympathy made her strong and brave; she was womanly and avoided mannish women; she had faith in God and man; a genuine Christian lady, like Mary of Bethany. She poured out the rich treasury of her life; she became a school teacher early in life, having taught at Hightstown in 1853. From there she went to Bordentown (our own Burlington county), New Jersey, where she established a free school.

At this period there was much prejudice against the public school system in spite of all opposition she overcame this and from six pupils the school grew to six hundred. When the Civil War broke out she offered her services to the nation, without pay, and it was while standing at the railroad station in Washington where the first blood had been shed that she nursed the victims of the Baltimore mob. She at once made an attempt to organize a work of relief, but women held back, herself not being allowed to go at first to the front.

She finally secured permission and her amazing work under the distressed conditions, her unwearied devotion and her countless services to the soldiers earned for her the name "Angel of the Battlefield." Congress voted to reimburse her for her work, but she refused to receive the money. Having been ill, she went to Europe in 1869 to regain her health. Her work on battlefields being known of in Europe at the time of the Geneva Convention, she was visited by the leading members who presented to her the red cross, the Red Cross, then its principles were set forth to her from her service with our own Sanitary Commission. Becoming interested she advocated its extension to cover the United States. In 1870, while in Bern the war between France and Prussia broke out and she was invited by some of the founders of Red Cross to go to the front and assist in caring for the wounded. Still an invalid, she went at once with her companion, Antoinette, and the two women were admitted within the lines of the German army. It was there that Miss Barton realized the enormous value and importance of the Red Cross work, in having supplies of all sorts ready and trained help to do everything to save life and relieve suffering.

At the siege of Strasburg and when the gates of the city were opened, Miss Clara Barton was there and marched in with the German army, medals of honor were showered upon her by the crowned heads. She urged the United States Government to the Geneva Treaty which was in the hands of the beloved McKinley and which was done by President Chester A. Arthur in 1881, and the great American Red Cross was inaugurated not only for war, but to help such calamities as the Michigan forest fires, Iowa, Louisiana and Alabama cyclones, Balkan war, Russian famine, Charleston, Italy and California earthquakes, Florida yellow fever epidemic, American massacres, Galveston storm, South Carolina's Islands tidal wave, mine disasters, and the recent Savannah fire and the present war. It is for the objects of such a society that the women of Palmyra Branch Red Cross are willing to work. When they call upon you for help, please assist them.

The memory of Clara Barton will long live in the minds of true Americans; her busy life ended a few years ago at the advanced age of 91 years.

A portion of this sketch was obtained from "A Woman of the Country," and life of Clara Barton, some from the lips of the writer's mother, who was at Andersonville during Miss Barton's stay there and personal recollections.

A large number of persons availed themselves of the "open house" Tuesday evening and are better acquainted with the methods and importance of the work in hand. The rooms were tastefully decorated with the Stars and Stripes, the Red Cross Emblems and war posters. Mothers and daughters wearing the habiliments of the order busily engaged at their work, presented an inspiring scene. Members of the Palmyra Band were clustered around the platform and discoursed patriotic airs. The ladies wish to thank the gentlemen visitors for that patriotic salute before their departure.

Mrs. Everett Walcott has consented to assist the chairman of publicity and any notes of value for publication relating to Red Cross work in Palmyra will be appreciated by this department.

Thirty-nine members enrolled this week, total, 250, good! Room for 250 more by July 4, send in your application.

The raising of the subscription to the fund as desired by President Wilson's proclamation has no bearing upon the membership, increase. We shall still have to secure members; the work is not completed; our service is only inaugurated. Ladies willing to work will be needed. This is the nation's business.

Curtains of Summer Business

By Handon Thompson

WINDOWS should be an integral part of every house that lays claim to architectural significance, and as such, they should be treated rationally and should be made to accord decoratively and harmoniously with its general scheme. Each room and every window, presents its distinct problem, but with a little study and a few practical hints, very good results may be attained at small cost.

A window, first of all, was designed to admit air and sunshine, but crowded living conditions have made it imperative that we must also seek privacy and seclusion, and so curtains are used not only as a decorative adornment, but also as a protection and shield from the outer world, so an attempt should be made to get this privacy without sacrificing the health-giving sunshine and air. The location of a room also is a factor to be reckoned with, for the bright light of Western and Southern exposures can be tempered more or less by inner as well as glass curtains, but as much light as possible should be admitted into a room that has a Northern exposure.

Simplicity is perhaps the first requisite that should guide us in our selection of curtains. Ornate heavily weighted with lace, are ostentatious and do not fulfill their mission nearly so adequately as do those made of simple, sheer materials in a well fitting, unobtrusive design.

They come to realize, not only from the viewpoint of beauty, but also of hygiene, that these simple affairs that can be laundered often and easily, have far greater decorative possibilities, and are quite appropriate when used in formal or unpretentious rooms.

THE living room must often do duty as a combined library, drawing room and parlor, and so, in combining its various functions it must be treated with a bit more formality. For such a room, net, either plain or figured, may be used for curtains, or screen of good quality. The edges of the curtains may be finished either with a hemstitched hem or with a fine guimpe or a narrow edging of fluff or some other heavy lace.

The shortage in linen of all kinds almost precludes their use, but the decorators show a heavy loosely woven cotton material that resembles in weave and texture the smart looking Russian linens that were used both for curtains and for runners and doilies for the table. This material has a style of its own, and a simple line of design is sufficient to make it stand out as a distinct feature.

For such curtains, a simple line of design is sufficient to make it stand out as a distinct feature. The edges of the curtains may be finished either with a hemstitched hem or with a fine guimpe or a narrow edging of fluff or some other heavy lace.

which the vats open, and is isolated, and is cut off from the rest of the plant by fire walls with self-closing doors. The report of the trouble with the No. 2 did not show where the valve leaked, but Jim quickly saw that the steam was escaping from the valve stem. He thought that that was the whole of the matter, for when he turned the steam off and on the valve seemed to work all right. As the valve was of the type that can be packed under pressure he did not take the time to turn off the main valve, which controlled the supply to all the vats; besides, he did not wish to stop work in the other vats, which were in operation. No. 2 had been cleaned the day before, and the lid was standing open. Although the valve was almost directly over the edge of the opening, Jim who always avoided an unnecessary motion, did not close the lid.

He loosened the packing nut at the stem and put in the new packing. He had begun to tighten the nut again and was leaning over the opening, when suddenly his foot slipped on the greasy floor, and his weight came full on the wrench. The tool shot off the nut, and before Jim had time to catch his balance he fell headfirst into the vat.

It was fortunate that there was ten feet of water in the tank, for otherwise he might have broken his neck. On account of the trouble with the valve, the water had been allowed to stand in the tank since the day before; although he found the water uncomfortably warm, it was not unclean.

Jim was a good swimmer and his act was to get his head above water. He wondered why he had such a hard time getting his head out of the water. He noticed that he was still clutching his pipe wrench firmly in his hand. The level of the water was a little less than ten feet below the top of the vat, and it occurred to him that with some effort he might be able to throw the wrench out; he hoped that the noise it made in falling on the iron floor would attract some one's attention.

First, however, he tried to call; but after a minute he remembered that there was no one in the room, and that, even if his voice were not entirely muffled by the tank, it would never carry through the fireproof doors. For the same reason it would avail him nothing to throw the wrench into the "charging" room. He tried to pound on the wall of the tank with his wrench, but apparently the boiling and bubbling in the other vats drowned the noise, or if anyone did hear it he would think merely that some workman was making repairs. Jim had been in the tank only a few minutes, but he was already much exhausted; the sturdiest athlete, burdened with a heavy weight of metal, as Jim was, could not keep afloat long if he tried to swim in hot water with his clothes on. But Jim did not become panicky-stricken; indeed, the fast-growing danger seemed merely to clear his head. In spite of the weight of the pipe wrench he clung stubbornly to it, for it seemed his only resource for escape.

Then, slipping off his seat, he moved the wrench up to the water line, where he made it fast again as well as he could. Then he wrapped his overalls about his hands and wrists, to protect them from the hot pipe in the attempt that he was about to make. When he had hooked his belt in the last hole to make as large a loop as possible out of it, he was ready.

He had left his shoes on to keep the tender soles of his feet from the hot pipe. Now, putting his feet on the surface of the tank, he reached the sloping side opposite; thus he could partly support himself, and had to keep only one hand at a time on the hot pipe, which was already burning through the cloth protectors. He could reach within a foot and a half of the opening at the top. Just above the edge of the opening he could see the valve—the root of all his troubles. Was it near enough for him to carry out his plan? It seemed as if his left hand were grasping a red-hot bar as he leaned out and with his right hand swung the looped belt toward the hand wheel of the valve. Twice it struck the wheel and fell off, but he made his third cast he let go of the pipe, for he could bear the pain no longer, but as he let go he threw himself upward. The loop caught over the pulley.

But this sudden leap had loosened the wrench, which had fallen to the bottom of the tank. With his footing gone, therefore, he dangled by one arm from his belt.

For a moment he hung there, nearly ready to give up the struggle and to drop back into the vat. Then his will gained the upper hand again. To get out now meant a climb no harder than he had made many a time as a boy merely to get a few coveted apples. He would not give up. Bringing his badly burned left hand into play again, he painfully worked his feet up through the opening. One hand caught the rim, and slowly the rest of his body followed. Then he fell in a heap on the floor. "Ach himmel, lazy-bones, couldn't you find a better place as dot to sleep?" growled Dick Franz, the assistant engineer, a few minutes later, as he stepped into the dusk of the "charging" room on his way to another part of the plant; but when he saw that the man he had just rescued was naked, he changed his tone.

Jim was out for several weeks with his burns, and to this day his left hand is a little stiff; but since that time he has been the most careful man in the company and the greatest advocate of "safety first." He has charge of all of the accident prevention work in the plant now—Youth's Companion.

A man should have a good excuse ready before committing a mean act. Many a man who follows a band wouldn't have the nerve to face the music.

have a simple little etched border done in the color that best harmonizes with the furnishing of the room, and this can be done by any woman who is at all clever in performing such household tasks. It is in bedrooms that one can satisfy one's taste for individuality, and a certain sprightliness and distinctness in color arrangements, and for such curtains there are a number of macerated and cotton fabrics that wash well. There are charming mullins and Swisses, both plain, dotted and figured. These very airy materials can hang small ruffles in rooms that are quiet and feminine, or if a note of color is to be achieved, they may be finished with a border of flowers, material the same from which hangings and bedspreads are made. Some curtains of a fine quality, point, damask and figured nets are also suitable for bedrooms.

WINDOWS of the ordinary type look best when the curtains, not too full, are hung flat against the glass. They can be finished at the top with a narrow hem, through which a small brass, or enameled rod is passed, the rod having rubber cushions on either end and a spring; this device doing away with the need of any permanent fixture or cornice. It adapts itself perfectly to any sized window and can be adjusted to any height. These rods are practical and can be used when screens cannot be fastened and where there are no plastered walls.

Sometimes small bone rings are fastened to the upper edge of curtains and these are adjusted to a rod or tucks, thus hiding the rod altogether. Cash curtains have almost entirely superseded those that touch the floor, except, of course, in the case of French windows. The mesh curtains reach a few inches below the sash and are far more sanitary and airy than those which were once popular. They are seldom looped back, except where a charming view of garden or a radiant glimpse of sunset is not to be obscured, and the window should act rather as a frame to a lovely picture.

The American Red Cross

must raise $100,000,000

THIS WEEK

FOR ITS WAR WORK

DON'T WAIT

- Until the ruthless enemy begins to drop bombs in your Burlington county school houses
- and massages your innocent babies
- and enslaves your women and girls
- and admittedly murders non-combatants by studied methods of starvation.
- and lays waste your fertile fields
- and devastates your towns
- and puts a German-Governor General at Trehton
- and you have nothing left to give

- to help the Red Cross "back our front" with all the medical needs of our new armies
- to help alleviate the present suffering on six million beds of pain where the Red Cross alone can aid
- to enhearten the war-worn nations who are fighting our battles, by sending food and relief to their destitute millions
- to help make certain that no alien invader's heel shall bruise the sod of our own fair land

For God's Sake Give! Give Until You Feel It! Give It Now!

RETIRED HUNT

It was a first-class smoking car, and it had been wantonly invaded by a mother and a howling baby. The big fat man in the corner stuck it as long as he could. Then he protested.

"I wish to goodness the company would reserve special carriages for howling brats!"

"Taint a brat!" snapped the mother, or, not. "And he don't howl half as much as you did at his age, by the look of you now."

Then to the baby:

"Baby, see the ugly man. Baby, see the ugly-wugly, monkey-punkie, piggy-wugly old man what took the first prize at the ugly-wugly show. Sh-sh! Baby keep quiet, else the nasty-pasty, doozy-woggy-faced old man will hear you."

But the train stopped just then, and the big fat man waited for no more.

SURFACE HARDENING OF GEAR TEETH

An English process, reported to be largely used for hardening gear teeth is known as the Vickers. It is local surface hardening and consists in applying momentarily to the surface of the part to be treated an intensely hot flame from an oxy-acetylene blow pipe. The surface having been raised to a high temperature, is quenched by the cold body of the metal beneath. The treatment is that usually provided for oxy-acetylene welding, but the temperature of the flame is higher, the pressure being obtained by adjusting the flame as for welding and then increasing slightly the supply of oxygen. The body of the work must be kept as cool as possible to insure that the quenching is sufficiently rapid. For small parts it is customary to immerse them in water. Bodies of large parts may be left to cool off by themselves, but where necessary a supply of cold water may be used to cool the work. In the case of the actual surface to be hardened is not to be submerged in water unless it is desired to give only a very shallow depth of hardened crust. In calculating the cost, for the purpose of comparison with furnace-treated work, it is pointed out that for the latter process machining is carried out to approximate dimensions only, so that any distortion due to the heat treatment may be corrected by grinding and straightening. ROLL OF HONOR

THE THREE COLORS THAT WILL NOT BURN

Red-White-Blue

In commemoration to those that are serving and have offered their services to the country, in the time of our greatest need, the following Roll of Honor. We ask the kind co-operation of our readers in keeping this list most complete at all times.

The laying aside of this "probable" claim to victory here the real cause of the war, which was lack of "quickness in the punches." One single mind you, just one lousy little single mind, would have scored two runs in the third inning and a home run in the fourth, sixth, seventh, or ninth innings. Or to pre-empt the above statement, six runs sent to the bowlers for want of one poor little boy.

Many who witnessed the Field Club baseball game last Saturday in Philadelphia are firmly convinced that had Yarnall rendered a more careful decision on Somers' in the seventh frame, the final result would have been far different than it was. Not being a close student of base ball psychology, I am quite unable to back my judgment to any great extent, but I do know that two men were in the third inning who had not been in the third inning on any other day.

EXPLAINING IT

The cyclist was a stranger in a literary street. That was evident from the cautious manner in which he picked his way through the half-empty thoroughfare. It was evening. A passerby approached him.

"Sir, and he, 'your' hacon has ceased its function."

"Sir," gasped the cyclist, dismounting from his machine.

"Your illuminator, I say, is attached in an unorthodox position."

"But, sir, it is not."

"The transversal ether oscillations in your incandescent have been disintegrated."

Just then an unsophisticated little paper-boy shouted across the street:

"Hey, mister, yer lamp's out!"

Giggles—My son says he finds his work very absorbing.

Banker—That's so? What does he do?

Giggles—Makes blotting paper.

CONSISTENT ORDERS

As raid much demand to his papers the Hindu clerk in charge of the official documents in one of the more remote Indian towns obtained permission to keep two cats, the larger of them receiving rather better treatment.

A few weeks later the head office at Delhi received this dispatch:

"I have the honor to inform you that the senior cat is vacant without leave. What shall I do?"

To this problem there was vouchsafed no answer. After waiting a few days the Hindu sent off a proposal.

"In re absence cat, I propose to promote the junior cat, and in the meantime to take into Government service a professional cat on full rations."

"No, thank you, I can do better than that."

HE ALWAYS HAD

The "sporting" son of wealthy parents was offered a job by an old friend of his father.

"How much will you pay me?" he asked.

"All you are worth," said the friend.

Like which he replied with business-like brevity:

"No, thank you, I can do better than that."

TRAGIC INDEED

"I hear Jones died from a single blow,"

"Who hit him?"

"No one. He blew out the gas."
