Higher Cost of Food-Building
 WOODBURY, Feb. 7.—When the question of persons improving the Cross Key-Turnersville road came up a year ago, the county engineer gave the probable cost for the five miles at about $71,000. Since then there has been an increase in the cost of materials and labor, and before the bids were opened by the Board of Freeholders the engineer presented his guess as to present cost at about $149,000. Seven bidders varied from $37,200.93 to $145,282.27.

SLAYERS OF DU PONT GUARD CONVICTED
 SALEM, Feb. 8.—Francisco Nico Constantino was convicted in the Salem County Court yesterday afternoon of the murder of Joseph J. Westcott on December 23, 1915. The jury returned a verdict of guilty on the first degree, and Judge Charles C. Black sentenced each of the two men to a term of ten years in the State Prison at Trenton.

It was shown at the trial that Constantino stood with a revolver in his hand and fired the shot which killed Westcott. He was a man of about thirty years old and formerly was a special officer in the Pennsylvania force, but because of his suspicious actions he was forced to resign about six months ago. He was charged with acknowledging stealing chickens after Westcott was murdered. The former owner of a small farm, Constantino was charged with the murder of Westcott. ENGLISH BIRD MAKING GOOD

The English Ringneck pheasant, judging by reports from gamekeepers throughout New Jersey during the recent gunning season, has been well established as a game bird in this State. Thousands of these birds were killed in several counties and many hunters repeated by shot the bag limit of three a day, beaten by H. Hoffman, of the Palmyra Country Club, by two strokes only. Cuthbert was tied with Hoffman on the thirty-second hole. Hoffman carded 85.

AUSTRALIAN SHEEP FARMS

The ranch is a community in itself. There is a blacksmith shop, a carpenter shop, and a laundry, in addition to the familiar sheep pens and wool sheds. Besides the stock house—a roomy structure of stone and galvanized iron—there are cutting houses for workmen, and huts for the families of "blackfellow"—the docile dependents who are fed, cared for by a children, and under a little inefficient service.

One of the first supplies awaiting the tourist from the Northern Hemisphere is to find that Australia and New Zealand may be treated as a unit. New Zealand is nearly twice as far from Australia as Bermuda is from New York, and is not only east but also south.

SYNOPSIS

Robert, an orphan, half French, half American, starting for America to stay with an uncle, meets Count de Lamoignon, crossing to secure mules for France. He is mistaken for a Frenchman and is taken to a man's home. He is a nephew. Knowing him to be a woman, Robert, Robert's uncle believes she is a nephew. General Carruthers, informs his supposed nephew that he needs his knowledge of French to straighten out a deal for providing mules for France. The governor's honor is involved in the mule deal.

Robert pledges her aid and is introduced to Governor Faulkner and to his private secretary, Buz. Buz is a Frenchman. Mrs. J. Whitworth is deep in the mule scheme with her husband and endeavoring to get the governor's signature to the transaction. The governor gives a dinner to Robert, who has been made private secretary. She matches her wits against Mrs. Whitworth.

Robert examines specifications of the proposed deal. Mrs. Whitworth tries to pump Robert and makes love to her.

"Shoo; that's no big job! I looked over and verified this one myself yesterday in ten minutes. Hello; this other one is in French! Just run it through, and if it is to tally call it and I'll hold this one. We can do it in fifteen minutes. Go ahead from the top line across." And my Buz said the paper in his hand as he sent of himself in readiness upon the corner of my desk beside me.

"Oh, my Buz, I have such a mortification that I cannot add one to another of these long figures! When I place one number to another I must use my fingers, and in this case you see that it is impossible." Tears I did not allow in my eyes, but they were in my voice, and I looked into the eyes of my Buz with a great terror. "What is it that I shall do? I am in disgrace."

"You complete edition of a kid, you don't you know I can do it for you—that is, if you know what all these little things stand for in English? Do you?" As he spoke that kind Buz put his hand on my shoulder with a nice rough shake.

"I did very much enjoy that hour in which my Buz labored with a pencil and a great industry while I called to him the list of long figures and then verified as he showed me the units upon the page in the French language. He made jokes at me between workings while he attended his cigarette and we, together, had much laughter.

"There are just three places where these figures disagree, and I have marked them carefully. L'Aiglon," he said, as at last he laid down both pieces of the paper. "These French specifications and figures I have translated into English. You just run in there to Bill with them and then forget you ever saw them and we'll be on our way to the girls in ten minutes. Bobby, I mean it when I say that men in your and my positions of trust just forget facts and figures the minute we get out of sight of our chiefs. And we forget the chiefs, too, believe me. Now run along and come out to the car on the same trot."

"Is it of honor not to tell to the Governor Faulkner that you assisted me in this task, my Buz?" I asked of him with anxiety.

"No need to tell him—it's all in the same office and will come to me for filing. Don't say anything that will bring on talk that keeps us from Buz and the gang. Just run!" With quick advice my kind Buz disappeared through the door into the office of my uncle, the General Robert, as I softly opened the door of the room of the Governor Faulkner and entered into his presence. And in that presence I found also my uncle, the General Robert, in a very grave consultation with the Governor Faulkner.

"The papers completed, your excellency," I said in a very low and meek tone of my voice as I laid the papers beside him on the table and prepared to take the running departure that my Buz had commanded of me.

The Buz's that I spent with my Buz at the club in the country with what he called in front of their very bunches of calico passed with such a rapidity that I felt I must grasp each minute and remonstrate with them for their fleetness. That Mrs. Buz was even much more lovely in her gray costume of golf with a tie of the color of the bow worn by a Buz than she had been in her chiffon of the dinner dance, and the beautiful Buz was much the same, with an added sympathy and charm, while I discovered a very sweet Kate Keith and a kind woman who was not of a countess, but of many interesting remarks which induced much laughing. With them were that Miles Menefee whom my Buz had recommended to me and also several young gentlemen of America whom I like exceedingly.

"Come on, L'Aiglon. It's time to beat it. We are late, and Sue is beginning to shoo," called my Buz from the door of the card room.

"My Buz," I said to that Mr. Buz Cloughden as he raced the slim car through the country and the city up to the Capitol hill, "you give to me a life of much joy in only a few days. I would that it could so continue."

"That's all right, Prince. Don't mention it," he answered me, with a laugh. "And, say, let's get to work, because at about 4 o'clock I'll have something that'll give you a start."

"Oh, but, my Buz, at 4 o'clock I must go for tea to the home of beautiful Madam Whitworth."

"Where-uh?" whistled my Buz as he looked at me from the top of my head to the toe of my shoe.

"Go ahead, sport, but accept it from me that Madam Pat is the genuine and original pump, so don't let her empty you. Do you want me to come by and extract you at about fifteen to 5? I'm sorry, but I really must have a business interview with you before 6."

And my Buz's eyes twinkled with something that was of a great pleasure to him, I could observe.

"It would be of more pleasure to me if you came at the half of 6, my Buz," I made a hurry to assure him, for I had a great dread of all of the falsehoods I was to say to that Madam Whitworth that afternoon for the purpose of extracting perhaps a little wicked truth from her to help in the defense of my Governor Faulkner.

"I'm on," answered my Buz promptly. "Beat it! I hear the old boy growling. And he disappeared behind the door of my uncle, the General Robert. I went to the duty of assuring the nice gentlemen in very rough clothing that the governor would in the morning read the paper on the subject of making a long road past his property in good condition by a vote."

The hour of 4 ended my duties for the day. Robert, marquis of Grex and By, did so long to go into that room of the Governor Faulkner and receive upon her hand one nice kiss of good night from him, but Mr. Robert Carruthers walked down from the Capitol and only passed to his for a little second. And his very handsome hat toward the window of his excellency's room high up above.

And the encounter with the beautiful Madam Whitworth was much worse than I had thought that it would be, though also it was of a very interesting excitement. She had made armaments for the encounter in the shape of a very lovely tea apparel of an incredible thinness to be used for covering, a little low fire in the golden grate and curtains of rose to throw somewhat of glow over the situation. Immediately I was seated beside her on a small divan upon which there was room for only one and a half persons, and my stupidity was called into vigorous action.

"I suppose you have spent the day in translating a lot of those long and tiresome French documents for the general and the governor. Thank goodness, that is no longer my task," she remarked as she tipped the cognac bottle over my tea and handed the cup to me.

"It is of a great fatigue to work upon a matter that one does not at all understand," I answered her as I slipped at that tea of a very disagreeable taste because of the cognac.

"Did they give you the two sets of specifications to compare?" she asked of me, with not much of interest apparent in her manner, though her hand shook as she poured for herself a very small cup of tea, which was then filled complete with cognac.

"France fighting in the trenches?" I asked of her as I made her comfortable in the hollow of my arm.

"If he doesn't sign them in a very few days the deal is all off," she answered me. "Left him get the capital to put up from some northern men who are—restless and—and suspicious. It must go through and immediately."

"Then it must be accomplished immediately," I answered her with decision.

"The agent of the French government will be here on Tuesday, and all of these preliminary papers must be signed before he can close the matter up finally. I hope that the conference over these specifications this afternoon will be the last. Are you sure you discovered no flaw over which the old general or the big stupid governor can haggle?"

"I discovered not a flaw," I answered her, with a great positiveness. "Do you say that it is soon that those representatives of my government come to make a last signing of the papers about the excellent mules to be sent from the great state of Harpeth to France who is at a war of death? I had not heard of the nearness of the visit at the Capitol."

"They don't know it—that is, Governor Faulkner does, but has told only me. He sees things my way, but of course he has to keep his councils from his secretary of state for the time being. And I'm telling you all about it because it is for France we plot and because I—this is the way to say it."

And with those wicked words, which involved the honor of the great Governor Faulkner, she pressed her body close to mine and her lips upon my mouth.

CHAPTER IX
Brothers by Blood.

FOR that career of that wicked woman I had not sufficient endurance, and I pushed her from me with roughness and sprang to my feet.

"It is not true, Madam Whitworth, that I am a Frenchman," I exclaimed, caught myself in the midst of my own betrayal just as I was about to be shown into a plot which it was of much value to know. And as my words ceased I stood and trembled before her wickedness.

"Do you know, Mr. Robert Carruthers, I do not entirely understand you," she said, with a great and beautiful calmness as she lighted a cigarette and looked at me trembling before her. "You are a very bold young cavalier, but you have the shrinking nature of a shall I say—a French girl?"

As she spoke those words, which began in sarcasm but ended in a queer, uncertain tone of suspicion, as if she had blundered on a reason to soothe her vanity for the recoil of my lips from her, an ugly gleam shot from under her lowered lashes.

"I am the son of the house of Carruthers as well as of Grex and By, beautiful madam, and I cannot endure that you put upon my very good uncle, the General Carruthers, an unfriendliness to France!" I exclaimed with a quickness of my brain that I had not before discovered. "On points of honor or I have that sensitiveness that you say to be—of a woman."

"Oh, my darling boy! I didn't mean to hurt you about that absurd old feud of—And as she spoke the beautiful Madam Patricia rose and came upon me with outstretched arms for another abhorred embrace, which it was to my good fortune to have interrupted. But I had a fear of that suspicion I then flashed into his mind even though lulled by my fine assumption of the attitude of a man of honor, and I made a beginning to say, when—

"Ob, yes, Mr. Carruthers is here, for I have an appointment to call for him," an interruption came in the voice of my Buz in remembrance with the black mark of Madam Whitworth in the hall of her house.

"Come in, Buz," called that beautiful Madam Whitworth as in one small instant she changed both her position with arms on my shoulder and her countenance of anger and anxiety. She was a very wise and beautiful and much experienced woman, was that Madam Whitworth, but she had given to me, unloathed as I was in the art of politics, the fact that I most wanted; that the two papers containing the specifications concerning the mules had been mistranslated by her.

"Put a shawl around you, Madam Pat, and come out here to the street a minute to see what is going to happen to the Prince of Carruthers," said my rescuer as he inserted his head into the room for one little minute and beckoned us to follow him.

And what did I find out there upon that street?

Inheritance Tax Increases
TRENTON, Feb. 20.—Reports of the state comptroller show that during the last year the total amount of inheritance tax collected was $1,558,353, as against $1,160,380 for the preceding year.

When fame comes to the average man it roasts upon his monument.

EDUCATIONAL WORK AIDED
Educational work of the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and the Campfire Girls is described in the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Education, Department of the Interior, just issued. In describing the educational phase of Boy Scout work, Mr. James E. West, chief scout executive, declares: "The Boy Scout movement aims to reinforce all of the agencies which make for right living and character development in the youth of America. It does not seek to supersede the home, church, or school, but to supplement these institutions largely in the leisure time of the boy; and to impart by means of its own programs and exercises the virtues of bravery, honor, and good citizenship. The character-building work of the movement is presented to boys in what is meant to be an 'attractive wrapping.' It is based largely on the method of learning by doing, in order that the boys may be taught to be resourceful and self-reliant in all situations in which they may be placed."

"The movement is non-sectarian and non-political. Its program offers to the boy a well-rounded mental, physical and moral experience, largely out-of-doors, and calculated to develop a love of country, God, and neighbor. For its success the movement depends upon the voluntary leadership of men of high ideals, who serve as scout masters and scout commissioners. The educational aspect of the work is emphasized by the fact that the 7-087 men who held commissions as scout masters on December 31 last, about 85 per cent. are college men and over 80 per cent. have either a high-school or a college education; 1,655 give their occupation as clergymen, and 790 as public-school teachers; others are professional men, journalists, students, or engaged in mechanical or mercantile pursuits. In practically every one of the 350 chartered councils the public schools are definitely represented through the service of the school superintendent on the executive board, and in many cases the school superintendent serves as president of the council."

In describing the educational work of the Girl Scouts, Mr. Montague Gammon, the executive director, shows how the movement has grown from a small beginning in Savannah, Ga., in 1912 to a national organization with troops in 350 communities. He says: "The Girl Scout program, presenting all of its activities in a series of well-planned and well-defined units, fills a distinct need in the equipment of women for modern life. In its requirements for the three grades of scouting and for the proficiency badges the organization is emphasizing the home-making, occupational and virtuous training, and first aid occupy a prominent place in the training."

"While the Girl Scouts organization is non-sectarian, it is distinctly religious. Each girl is expected to live up to the teachings of her particular church. She can not be a good scout unless she is faithful to her own religion."

Group teaching by mothers is one of the features of the work of the Girl Scouts. It is a plan by which mothers are encouraged to cooperate in the winning of honors, the honors are actually awarded in the council fire in the presence of the group. This is one of the secrets of the success of Campfire Girls, who know how to make bread, while another, who excels in sewing, or some other form of home craft, will take them into her home for the next meeting. In speaking of the system "honors" Mrs. Farwell declares:

Five people can swim today to one of a dozen years ago, every vacant lot is a baseball field in the summer months, the suburban sidewalks are roller-rinks for our children, the churches and schools are used as part-time gymnasiums, and field days and dancing classes are the rules rather than the exceptions.

"This country need not worry over preparedness. Our people are living a safer and more healthful and safer life than at any time in the history of our Nation."

Cranberry Bog Dams Damaged
NEW EGYPT, Feb. 22.—The thaw of the last couple of days has done considerable damage to dams, outcrops and bridges in this vicinity. Cranberry growers have had large losses at work since Sunday protecting their gates and banks which inclose their bogs for the winter.

Court Refuses Alimony to Wife
CAMDEN, Feb. 20.—Denying the application of Mrs. Helen Carlson, 37 years old, for alimony pending the disposition of her bill for separate maintenance from her husband, Alfred Carlson, of Wildwood, Vice-Chancellor Leaning yesterday ruled that the wife had not supported her cruelly charges.

SAFETY AND PREPAREDNESS
We read a great deal these days about National Preparedness, and, if we believe all of the calamity howlers, we are on the broad road to perdition," writes William H. Jamerson, General Manager of the National Safety Council, in an industrial publication.

"As a matter of fact, never before in the history of the world, has real preparedness taken such a hold upon a Nation as has the preparedness idea of today. Not that I mean that thousands and hundreds of thousands of our young men are becoming experts with sixteen-inch guns, or daily becoming letter-perfect in the manual of arms, but I refer to preparedness in a truer sense."

"A dozen years ago if you met a railroad man of lesser rank than that of a general manager, you instinctively glanced at his hands to count the remaining fingers, didn't you? Well, today it is different. If a railroad of one hundred cars could be run nine times around the world, it's an even chance that on the completion of the ninth trip, not one employee of the successive crews operating the train would have met with a fatal accident. Isn't that real preparedness?"

"You could operate a trans-continental limited train between San Francisco and New York for a generation without a fatal injury to a passenger. In the last five years only one passenger was killed in a train accident each year out of every three hundred and fifty-five million passengers carried one mile."

"Nor does the preparedness idea stop with the railroad. Wonderful as has been the success of the idea on what was formerly ranked as the most dangerous of all our industries, the average number of tons of coal mined in the United States per fatal injury during the last forty years was one hundred and eighty thousand six hundred and seventy tons. Last year this figure was reduced to one fatality to two hundred and twenty-eight thousand six hundred tons, and this, to, in spite of the great increase of non-English speaking men in the mining industry."

"The same spirit of preparedness has invaded building operations. With the advent of modern steel construction and the piling of story on story in the newspapers, for want of a better expression coined the sky-scraper phrase, safety of the workmen for a time became a by-word. Do you remember the banner of the structural iron workers in their Last Day parade: 'We don't die, we are killed! Well, that doesn't hold good any longer. An iron worker has about the same chance to die from pneumonia, scarlet fever, or other contagious disease these days, as he has from industrial accidents."

"In the industries we find intelligent preparedness lengthening the life of the worker an average of nine years, in some of the more confining trades, to ten years in trades such as cigar making and printing, while in others where dust, poor sanitation, and occupational hazard was the rule, rather than the exception, I believe twelve and fifteen years have been added to the life of the average worker."

"Preparedness has been the watchword in the shops and factories, in the mines, and on the railroads for a decade. For a time the employer was sadly put to it to convince his workmen that he should be as careful as they were. Day in and day out the fight against carelessness had to be waged. A trip through a shop would show a scrap of discarded rag carelessly tied around an injured finger, or maybe a 'chaw' of tobacco doing duty as an antiseptic. Today the bulletin board with its 'Take your scratched finger to the doctor' is the rule. 'Your eyes are the windows of your soul, wear your goggles; the company furnishes them' without charge, is posted in ten thousand shops."

"An accident in this shop is a serious reflection on the foreman in charge of the work" drives home to the man on the job that the management is in earnest. "Be careful! Think safety, if safety interferes with production explain your troubles to the Safety Committee and your work will be made safe." A box-car can be rebuilt in thirty days, but it takes a lifetime to make a man. The message of one railroad corporation to its men. STONE HARBOR TO
HAVE $18,000 PIER
STONE HARBOR, Feb. 22.—Borough council Tuesday night authorized the building of a recreation pier extending 1120 feet out over the ocean and fronting 127 feet along the east side of the boardwalk, and almost opposite to the 10th street approach, and to cost $18,000. The plans include stores in front, a pavilion seating 500 people and the promenade to the pier end, and are to be in the architect's hands this Saturday, and the construction to be started.

Other business of general interest was to prepare ordinances, for final passage on March 5, for extending and adding to the recently acquired water and sewer plants, so as to have their advantage extend over the entire corporate limits. The water committee was authorized to receive bids for the sinking of one or more wells to be ready to act in case of need.

Contracts were placed for the grading, curbing and paving of the streets of the ocean side half of the boulevard district, at a cost of $21,450, that being the lowest; and for clearing away the debris and appliances following the construction at Colonial Point bulkhead and accepting the 15-cents-per-cubic-yard bid for the filling of the bulkhead.

City Employees Want More Pay
GLOUCESTER, Feb. 20.—Following close upon the granting of the request of the police and water works employees for an increase in salary, other city employees will ask for more pay.
